Lady Betty Across the Water

By C. N. & A. M. WILLIAMSON

Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

Mr. Trowbridge and Mr. Brett got up, and I did, too disappointed that we weren't to have it out of doors, but still, I reminded myself, the sitting room would be nice and cool. But I found that we were being led through to the dining room.

There was the long table laid out again, with a regular sit down meal—cream cheese and cake and blackberries and a big plate of honey, some curious kind of smoked meat cut very thin and the potatoes which I'd smelled frying.

"What an odd tea!" I thought. But the oddest part was that after all there wasn't any tea.

It wasn't much past 6 when we finished, and soon Mr. Brett asked me how I would like to walk over to Mrs. Randal's and see my friend Miss Woodburn, since she couldn't come to me. The place was less than a mile away by short cuts which he knew, and he would take me there.

The shadows were beginning to grow long and thin when we started, though the sun was still bright, so I carried a sunshade, and went hatless, American fashion.

To avoid going out in the road we took field paths and skirted along the edge of meadows where grain was tall and golden or white as a summer snowstorm. There were no proper stiles, as with us, so whenever we came to one of the rough fences which divided one field from another I had to mount on the first or second bar and let Mr. Brett lift me over.

He is so strong that he did it as if I were a bundle of down, instead of a tall girl, and I had much the same exhilarating sensation I used to have as a wee thing when I rode wildly on Mohunsleigh's foot. I was glad when we came to the fences, and that there were a good many of them. But I wasn't at all glad when Mr. Brett jumped me over into a grass meadow, where there was a whole drove of ferocious looking black and white cattle.

"Couldn't we go some other way around?" I asked, longing to get behind him, but ashamed for him to see what an idiot I am about cows, and perhaps make him lose his good opinion of me as a reasonably brave girl.

We took field paths and skirted the edge of meadows.

"I'm afraid not, unless we turn back," said he. "But you needn't mind them. Remember you're with an old 'cow puncher.'"

"Oh, were you one, too?" I asked, trying to seem at ease.

"Too?"

"I was thinking of a friend of my cousin Mohunsleigh's, whom he was always talking about, a Mr. Harborough, who lives in San Francisco. Mohunsleigh knew him abroad somewhere. He used to be a 'cow puncher'—whatever that is—in Texas, I believe, though now he's a millionaire. Did you ever hear of him?"

"Yes," said Mr. Brett in rather a dry way.

"I was so disappointed not to meet him."

(As we walked on, I kept my eyes on the horrible animals who were grazing at some distance.)

"Why?" he asked the question almost sharply.

"Because my cousin says he's such a glorious person."

"Well gilded, anyhow."

"Oh, I don't mean on that account. I'm rather blase of millionaires lately. But from Mohunsleigh's accounts he must be—well, the sort of a man we like."

"We?"

"Girls. Brave and adventurous, and reckless, and that sort of thing."

"I'm afraid his millions are more of an attraction to most girls."

"Why, you're as bad as he!" I exclaimed.

"In what way?"

"Unjust, and—almost morbid. I wouldn't have thought you would be like that, though perhaps one can't blame him so much if he's had bad experiences. I am sorry for him. It must be miserable to fancy always that people care for you for your money."

"I'm sorry for him too. At least, I used to be—whenever I thought of him."

"Aren't you now?"

"No. I believe he's a changed man. He's found that there are exceptions to the gloomy rule he'd laid down for humanity."

"Oh, then he's happier."

"So far as I understand the case, he isn't exactly happy yet. He isn't out of the woods. In fact, he's in the thickest part. But he sees blue sky and the sun shining overhead."

"What do you mean?"

"A fellow who knows him very well told me that Harborough had fallen in love with a beautiful girl who was so unworldly that she might be induced to marry for love—if she cared."

"Then why isn't he happy?"

"Because he doesn't know whether she can ever care for him—except as a friend. He's sure she likes him pretty well, but there's nothing in that. I'm mighty ignorant about such things myself, but they say if a girl doesn't mind showing that she's your friend and values you in a way it's a sign she's a thousand miles off from falling in love with you. What's your opinion on the subject, as you seem to be rather interested in Harborough?"

"My goodness, Mr. Brett, there's a cow looking at us. Oh, what shall we do? It's the worst cow of all. It's putting its head down now. It doesn't like us. Oh, what an appalling beast. I believe it must be a bull."

"It's a very young one," said he calmly. "Now, don't be frightened. This is going to be nothing at all."

"Are you sure?"

"Can't you trust me?"

"Yes. I know you won't let me be hurt. But you"—

"Don't worry. Perhaps we shall have a little fun. Just wait."

The cows were delighted. Evidently they regarded the horrid, thick necked brute as their champion. They didn't follow him toward us, but lifted their heads and stared complacently, as much as to say: "Isn't he a splendid fellow? Now he's going to give them what they deserve."

What is 'Good' Tea?

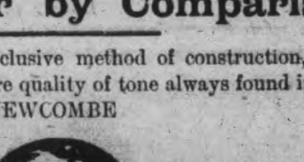
BEFORE Tea brands were widely known—before Red Rose Tea was sold throughout Canada—a woman asked her Grocer if he had any 'Good' Tea—and the Grocer replied,

"Red Rose Tea is Good Tea"

There you have the origin of our modest slogan—the reason for it. And surely no better source or reason could be given.

Consider the matter for a moment—

Suppose you were to forget the name "Red Rose," and ask the Grocer for a pound of 'Good' Tea—what would you mean by the term 'Good'?



You would simply mean Tea that was ALL Tea could be.

So—when we are able to say

"Red Rose Tea is Good Tea"

—we have said all that can be said.

RED ROSE is a blend of the best Indian and Ceylon Teas—

Because these are world's best Teas. Assam—in Northern India—is the original home of the Tea plant—the soil being specially adapted for growing rich, strong Teas—

Ceylon Teas are more delicately flavored. Therefore the Red Rose blend is generously rich in both, strength and flavor—

—Even if modestly and simply advertised as

"Red Rose Tea is Good Tea"

There are several grades selling at different prices, but, perhaps, the 40c. grade will please best. It is not only fine in quality but goes farther.

JOHN A. FLETT TALKS OF LABOR FEDERATION

Mr. John A. Flett, representing the American Federation of Labor, was in the city last night and to-day, and was seen by a Review reporter who questioned him about the objects of the union and some of the work which was being accomplished.

"The American Federation of Labor," said Mr. Flett, "is composed of one hundred International unions, twenty-seven thousand local unions, representing a membership of two millions of people."

All of the local organizations in the city are affiliated with the International Trade Unions, and Mr. Flett's visit to the city was to ascertain the conditions of these various organizations.

"The International movement of labor," said Mr. Flett, "is not only confined to this country, but is reaching out for a universal sway. Last year in the city of Budapest, Hungary, what is known as a Secretariat of Labor was held, to which delegates were sent from the American Federation of Labor for the first time.'

This, Mr. Flett considered, was the beginning of a world-wide movement of Federation. The President of the Secretariat will visit America this month and see a few of the most important cities in Canada and United States. He is billed to visit Toronto this month.

"There are to-day," said Mr. Flett, "between eleven and twelve million trade unionists in the world."

"Last year the largest increase in the history of the Federation was reported, despite all opposition, from such big corporations as the United States Steel Trust and other gigantic combinations of capital.

"The increase in membership since the last Convention in November, was 136,229 over last year, and undoubtedly," said Mr. Flett, "the increase will be in the same ratio up to the time of the next Convention.'

To-night a meeting will be held in the Labor Hall to which all interested labor organizations are invited.

SPOTS FOUND ON THE SUN

An interesting phase in connection with the sun, was reported to the Review to-day by Dr. Marsh, of Springville.

Every eleven and a half years there occurs what is known as a minimum and maximum sun spot period, when there are spots on the sun's surface. During the maximum sun spot period a large number of specks may be discerned on the solar disc, and during the minimum very few are noticeable. We have just passed through the minimum period of this phenomena, which has lasted since last fall, continuing through the past winter. There has been an occasional small sun spot.

Dr. Marsh, with the aid of his telescope, discovered a group of these sun spots on the eastern wing of the sun, on Wednesday evening. The measurements of the group were 50,000 miles in length, and 5,000 miles in width. While the figures may seem large, yet it does not represent a large disturbance. These spots will likely be invisible to-day.

Several Reasons why Mitchell Cars are high in Quality and low in Price :—

1st. The Mitchell manufacturers are one of the few firms in America who refuse to partake in the Automobile Trust. They strictly refuse to have an American Financier set their prices and control their stock.

2nd. They do not waste enormous sums of money in unnecessary advertising, but devote the money in replacing parts and and giving service absolutely free to Mitchell owners.

3rd. By having the most modern and up-to-date manufacturing establishment in America with capital of $10,000,000.

4th. By having 13 years experience in building Motor Cars, and by holding their skilled mechanics for years and do not experience the difficulties of various firms with unskilled workmanship.

98½ per cent. of cars manufactured by The Mitchell-Lewis Co. since their inception are still running and giving entire satisfaction.

The Mitchell Cars are on Exhibition for inspection and demonstration at

LOCAL JEWS TO BUILD HOMES IN THE WEST END

At a meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council last night, Ald. Duffus drew attention to the fact that a number of Jews are contemplating the erection of several shacks, north of Warne's store between Park and Reid streets.

If these were to be built, Ald. Duffus thought it was undesirable that houses of poor appearance should be allowed to mar the handsome residential effect of the locality. He advised that the fire limits be extended to cover the locality in which event the building by-law would not prohibit the erection of any but the best buildings in the West End.

The question was referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

SANITARY INSPECTOR.

Ald. Duncan said that there should be some distinguishing outfit worn by the sanitary inspector such as a uniform or a cap. The chairman of the Property Committee was authorized to purchase a cap for the new officer.

All Laborers and Wage Earners should attend the meeting in Labor Hall 435 George St. Saturday evening April 13 at 8 o'clock. who are interested in forming a Federal Labor Union. 2d Reading—Mr. George Lynch.

Song—Mr. Langley.
Quartette, "Killarney" — Philharmonic Quartette.
Song, "Garden of Roses"—Mr. Lee.
Song, "The Bedouin Love Song"—Mr. Albert New.

During the progress of the program an address was given by Mr. John A. Flett, representative of the American Federation of Labor.

BREEZY RUNAWAY

The pedestrians on Water street, south of Hunter, were the spectators (and participants) in a lively scene yesterday, when a horse, belonging to Mr. Switzer, of Emily, broke away from in front of Mr. W. G. Morrow's blacksmith shop.

The startled animal took a zig-zag course up to the market, sped half way across the market square and when the rig upset, continued its flight up Water street and to the Palace Hotel yeard.

No great damage was done either to the horse or the dog cart attached.

AUTO ASSOCIATION HELD MEETING

Between thirty and forty members of the Peterborough Auto Association met in the Montreal Bank Chambers last night. Mr. Hazlewood, the representative of the Ontario Motor League, who was to have addressed the meeting was unfortunately not able to be present, circumstances forcing him to stay in Toronto. Mr. A. H. Stratton, president of the association, occupied the chair.

The meeting was an enthusiastic one, and the president read the 45 reasons why auto owners should belong to the association.

The fee will be $5.00 and will admit one to the membership of the local association and all the privileges of the Ontario Motor League.

It is likely that Mr. Hazlewood will come at some future date to address the association.

TO CELEBRATE 100TH BIRTHDAY

That we are approaching within five or six years the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the beginning of things in connection with the settlement of what is now the city of Peterborough and district surrounding, was pointed out by Mr. F. H. Dobbin in his address to the Women's Art Association and friends at the Public Library room of the Association last night.

Speaking of the time when the city was young, he told the story of the Robinson emigration, the establishment of municipal, postal and travelling facilities in the district, some relation of the early pioneers, who they were and how they worked out their lives, and pointed out what they had done to make the city what it is.

The relation was interspersed with anecdote and illustration of the difficulties of pioneer life, of making progress under difficulties, of the habits and customs incidental to community life, and of the several enterprises that had helped to bring in population and enlarge the borders of the place. The physical appearance of the city was contrasted, as it is at present, with that of fifty or sixty years ago, and some account was supplied of the early railroad projects and enterprises put forward.

The address was well attended and interested those who came to hear it.

FOOT BRIDGE ACROSS RIVER

At the committee of the whole last night, Ald. Buller brought up the matter of putting a foot bridge at the C. P. R., for the convenience of people in the south, who lived across the river and who were employed in Peterborough. Ald. Buller thought the Mayor should endeavor to obtain some concessions from the C. P. R. superintendent, to allow these people to cross without their being liable to a fine for trespassing. He thought the superintendent might allow a foot bridge to be constructed.

It was moved by Ald. Buller, seconded by Ald. Anderson that the Mayor interview the new superintendent with a view to arranging for a foot path across the C. P. R. for pedestrian traffic.

In seconding the motion Ald. Anderson said that the Peterboro Lumber Company, were losing men owing to the inconvenience of getting to their place of employment. Ald. Buller stated that there was a crying need for better passage to and fro at this point.

The Mayor informed Ald. Buller that he had interviewed Superintendent Osborne, when in Peterboro with the purpose of seeing if a foot bridge could be placed there. He had been told by that official that the C. P. R. company would not consent to its construction, as it was contrary to rules.

It was pointed out that the express had often to be stopped while crossing the bridge, to allow women to get out of the way, who were caught in the middle of the bridge.

WORK STARTED FOR TURNERS

Building operations were commenced yesterday for the addition of two storeys to the factory of Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, owing to more room being required to meet the increasing volume of the firm's business.

When completed the building will be five storeys high, and will be the highest in the city, next to the Quaker Oats Company. The two new storeys will be the same size as the present building and will be used for manufacturing. It means also the employment of more hands at the factory.

Mr. Robert Jones is the contractor and builder on the work.

Meaford wants a fish hatchery and also to be raised to a customs port of entry.

FOOTBALL ENTHUSIASTS PREPARING FOR SEASON

A meeting of the Midland Football League, will be held in the Y.M.C.A. parlors on Saturday afternoon, April 27th at one-thirty. All clubs interested and who intend to compete are asked to be represented at the meeting. The prospects for the season are reported to be bright and indications point to keener interest this year than ever before. Any information, regarding the league wil. be furnished by Mr. Will Milburn 271 William street.

The Canadian General Electric has organized already and a good practice was held at the Park street grounds this afternoon.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

Says the Ottawa Journal: When a Peterborough fan wrote in to one of the papers in that town suggesting that the ball club be called the "Yankees" he hit a spot that is somewhat tender to many of the Canadian rooters. Of course, the game is an American one, and it is natural that it should be played in the States more than in Canada, also that the best players come from the country where they play the most baseball. But a league with a name like the Canadian League would make a hit with a large number of the ball fans if they would look around Canada for men and give at least a percentage of them a trial before going outside. The Ottawas announce themselves willing to give any Canadian a try-out at Chatham. How about the other seven clubs in the circuit?

St. Thomas, April 12.—St. Thomas will continue to be represented in the Canadian League. At an enthusiastic meeting of citizens held in the City Hall which was opened by Mayor Price, it was announced that five citizens—W H Swift, J W Chandler, C O Stanley, Ed. Killingsworth and J E Turton—were prepared to take over the franchise on the terms offered by the League Committee, provided the citizens gave them $500 or $600 in subscriptions. A telegram was read from Secretary Robinson of Hamilton, on behalf of President Fitzgerald and himself, authorizing the committee to assume control of the team on the terms submitted to the league. These are as follows: The new owners are to meet all outstanding liabilities, amounting to $957, pay Chaucer Elliott $250 on May 26 and $250 on September 3, when they own the franchise.

MAY BE AUTO RACES AT C.W.A. MEET HERE

The Canadian Wheelman's Association meet, to be held here this year will be under the entire supervision and control of Mr. F. R. J. McPherson. The meet it, is expected will be held in August, most likely in the Exhibition Grounds.

The events will consist of bicycle, motorcycle and probably, automobile races, and will be open to all Ontario Wheelers. It is possible too that contests between lady cyclists will be held.

The competitors may use any kind of mahcine, either racer or other type, and can have their bicycles equipped with any of the ordinary fixtures.

The meet, held in Toronto last year was a great success and it is anticipated that it will arouse the same interest here.

BRITAIN AND AEROPLANES.

Competitions Between the Different Manufacturers Is Vigorous.

More business-like than the recent French military aeroplane competitions, the War Office tests announced recently will be generally approved as calculated to bring out highly efficient military machines. The amount of the prizes is adequate, but the right of purchasing prize-winning machines at $5,000 is driving a hard bargain.

In the French trials guarantees to purchase, machines at $8,000 each were given and the prize-winners were secure of orders for a certain number. There is no definite undertaking to buy winning machines in the British trials, although manufacturers need have no uneasiness on that score, since it is the definite policy of the War Office to acquire a large number of aeroplanes. It must be said that only orders for a number of machines at $5,000 each would make it worth while to enter the competitions.

In some respects the tests are more severe than the French, and in most details they are more workmanlike and up-to-date. One thing is clear, the conditions — among which, is a speed minimum of fifty-five miles per hour—will in all probability prevent any British biplane from winning a prize. In the French trials only one biplane, the Breguet, flew at fifty-nine miles per hour, but all the others were far behind. Now the Cody machine is the fastest of British biplanes, but it could not quite manage fifty-five miles per hour and fulfill all the other conditions as well. However, Mr. Cody is already hard at work designing a new machine to replace the one broken by Lieut. Parke the other day, and he will be a very strong candidate.

The excellent condition as to packing the machines takes away one of the advantages of the French makers in their possession of aeroplanes successful in the French trial, for even the best of them are not capable of being packed up into dimensions for transport on an English railway, and it would require a good deal of redesigning to fit them for this quality.

In stipulating that in the British sections of the competitions foreign motors may be used, the War Office have no doubt assumed that British motor makers would be hard pressed to produce high-powered engines in time for the trials. There are good engines up to 60 h.p. available now but it would not be easy to produce bigger ones and get them in trim for these severe trials by next summer. At the same time, in a British test, foreign engines ought to be excluded; their opportunity lies in the international division of the competitions. It is just as important to encourage the production of British aero-motors as of British aeroplanes. This is the weakest point in the conditions, and it will probably have the effect of preventing several British motor makers from going to the expense of designing new engines. Why have a British section and leave the ... engine out of it?

The stipulations as to a dual contest, the capability of being started by the pilot alone and preferably from his place in the machine, and as to the interchange ability of parts are excellent. The optional quality as to the use of silencers to the engine ought certainly to have been made one of the essential conditions.

Gems of Irish Oratory.

In "Wits and Their Humors," the Rev. J. O. Bevan relates the following Irishisms which have been perpetrated in Parliament and elsewhere:

"Mr. Speaker, before I begin to spake, I should like to say," etc.

"The voice of Oireland is now making itself felt. So long as she was silent, England was deaf to her cries."

"The cup of Ireland's miseries has been running over for centuries, and now—it is almost full."

"The right hon. gintleman is attempting to ram his bill down our throats — behind our backs; but we have many friends, though they may be backward in coming forward. The preamble of the bill has a feature in it which is objectionable, and on this feature the whole question hinges."

"The Government is taking credit for what it has not done; like the cuckoo, which, as you honorable gentlemen are aware, is the only bird which does not lay its own eggs."

Pressing a lever under one handle dumps a wheelbarrow that a New Yorker has patented, a spring rod lowering one of the sides.

Important Advice To SPECTACLE WEARERS

Three Plain Facts

1 That more eyes are injured by the injurious use of Glasses than by any other known cause.

2 That a great number of people are wearing spectacles unsuitable for them, and for which their eyes have not been tested.

3 That the old fashioned and unscientific method of testing the eyes by trying on various spectacles of different strengths until the sight is apparently suited, is to say the least of it, dangerous.

It cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of those who suffer from defective eye-sight that proper lenses and correctly fitting frames are absolutely essential for comfortable spectacle wearing. We grind our own lenses.

STRONG PROTEST OF MONAGHANITES

Against Dumping Ground Site — City Will Not Buy Just Yet.

A strong deputation from the township of North Monaghan, headed by Reeve Howden, waited upon the City Council last evening and lodged a polite but vigorous protest against the proposed use of the section of property in their township, near Crawford's Grove, as a dumping ground for the city's garbage. It will be remembered that a special committee appointed to investigate, hit upon this section and secured an option, intending to ask the City Trust Commissioners to acquire it for the sum of $2,200. Their proposed action received a severe jolt last night, when after stating in plain language, their reasons for objecting, Reeve Howden presented a largely signed petition from the residents of North Monaghan, who are unanimously opposed to the selection.

"We understand," said Reeve Howden, acting as spokesman, "that the city is taking action to purchase a lot in North Monaghan for a dumping ground. While we have no objection to them buying the land, we most decidedly do object to the purpose for which it was intended to use it." He then produced an important looking document, which was a petition outlining the reasons of the residents for objecting. Some of the reasons were; first, that it created a distinctly undesirable stench, secondly, that it would pollute the water, and other reasons more or less important.

Mr. John Holmes, one of the deputation, remarked that, "down there they had taken the dirt and filth of the city for years, and it was considered an injustice."

Mayor Bradburn inquired of Reeve Howden if he could suggest any other property in that vicinity or anywhere which might be secured in place of the plot selected. The Reeve replied that he would not care to, without giving some consideration to the question. If the Council, however, should pick on any other lot, in their township, he expressed himself as perfectly willing to talk it over with the township Board of Health. Ald. Gillespie thought that an excellent suggestion and therefore moved that the Property Committee of the City Council meet the North Monaghan Board of Health, and talk the matter over. In the interval negotiations to purchase the lot originally selected, from Mr. Archie Jackson, be suspended until after the meeting. The consultation will take place Monday evening at 7.30 o'clock at the city buildings.

The other members of the deputation were Messrs. Hayword Anderson, and Saunders, the latter also speaking strongly against the choice made by the committee for a dumping ground.

W. O. W. AT HOME

The Woodmen of the World held a most successful "At Home" last night in their new hall.

Over two hundred invited guests were present and as a result of the perfect arrangements made by the committee in charge, everything went smoothly and everyone had a very enjoyable time.

The earlier hours of the evening were spent in progressive euchre contests. These were followed by a generous supply of delicacies provided and served by Messrs. Coleman Bros.

After the refreshments strains of swinging music supplied by Tucker's orchestra, invited the guests to indulge in waltzes and two-steps which irresistable invitation they were delighted to answer. The dancing continued till about half-past two, when the affair was brought to a close.

A. O. F. SEND LETTER OF CONDOLENCE

The members of the A.O.F. sent the following letter of condolence to Mrs. A. Parrish, the widow of the late Mr. Albert Parrish, who was killed in Vancouver, the deceased having been a member of Court Stanley, No. 7680:

Mrs. A. Parrish, City:

Dear Mrs. Parrish,—We, the officers and members of Court Stanley, No. 7680, Ancient Order of Foresters, extend to you sincere sympathy in the great sorrow which has bereft you so suddenly in the death of your dear husband, and our late brother, and we trust what seemingly is your loss will be his eternal gain, and we commend you to our Heavenly Father, who alone can give you comfort and relieve you distress, and although we have to part with our loved ones here on earth, may we all live so that we shall meet bye and bye in that mansion above, where there will be no parting and all tears are wiped away.

Signed on behalf of Court Stanley, No. 7680.

SETH ADLAM,
Treasurer.

BRIGADIER TAYLOR TO VISIT PETERBORO

The meeting in the S.A. Temple, Simcoe street, will be of unusual interest to-night and to-morrow, as the local corps is to be favored with a week-end visit from Brigadier Chas. Taylor, Principal of the Training College for Officers, Toronto. The Brigadier is an offier of long and varied experience, is a very clear and logical speaker, and his addresses will doubtless be of a very instructive and helpful nature. A hearty invitation is extended to the public generally as well as to the Brigadier's many friends in particular, to come along to-night and to-morrow and hear him.

MR. B. A. ROSE IS FIN. SECRETARY

Succeeds Mr. Geo. Powell in Court Chemong I.O.F.

Court Chemong, 530, I.O.F., held the semi-monthly meeting in the S. O.E. Hall, Hunter street, on Thursday evening, there being a good attendance of the members present. The meeting was presided over by Bro. D. Wallace, C.R. The court was favored with a visit from Br. R. Nimmo, D.S.C.R., and Bro. W. J. Wilson, D.S.C.R., who have been in the city for some time, and quite a number of new members have been added to the court through their efforts. Bro. G. W. Powell, who has been financial secretary for about 14 years, resigned that position, owing principally to his business requiring all his attention, and the members expressed their regret at his resignation. On motion of Bro. Midill and Bro. Allison a vote of appreciation was unanimously tendered Bro. Powell, who replied in a suitable manner. The court then chose as their new financial secretary Bro. B. A. Rose, Grand Trunk City Ticket Agent, George street. Bro. Rose will enter on his new duties at once, and the members are requested to note the change of financial secretary.

MARKET PRICES

Good Offering in Butter and Eggs To-day.

The temperature is so high now that it is uphill work for the meat vendors to sell quarters of lamb, beef or pork. For that reason there were only a few meat-laden wagons on the market this morning.

There was a good supply of butter and eggs, but the large demand kept the prices steady. Maple syrup was more plentiful to-day, selling at 40c. a quart, or $1.50 a gallon.

To-day's prices were:

Mutton, front, 11 1-2c; hind, 12 1-2.
Veal, front, 8c; hind, 10c.
Pork, front, 12c; hind, 13c.
Chickens, each, 50, 70 and 75c.

Eggs, per dozen, 23 and 24c.
Potatoes, per bag, $125, $1.50 and $2.00.

WALK ACROSS CENTRAL PARK

On behalf of the Peterborough Horticultural Society, Messrs. P. Campbell and H. B. Cowan, requested the City Board of Works last night to take steps to lay a concrete sidewalk across Central Park at an early a date as possible. Mr. Campbell said that the Society had been agitating for a sidewalk there for years, and that there was an urgent necessity for it. He pointed out the abuse to which the Park is being subjected to, due to the lack of a proper path across. At present there are four or five ordinary foot-paths worn into the grass from people crossing the park.

Mr. Campbell also showed in the plan, a walk, branching off from the first walk, about the centre, and running west, midway between the Collegiate and the Armories. Mr. Campbell in conversation with J. H. Burnham, M.P., was given to understand that the Government might assist with the latter walk.

The Board were favorably impressed with the idea for a sidewalk, Ald. Johnston remarking that there certainly should be a good sidewalk there, or else no walk at all.

On motion of Ald. Gillespie and Johnston, the building of a concrete walk, eight feet wide will be proceeded with this year, and be finished this year if possible. The chairman of the Board of Works and the City Engineer will have the matter in hand.

THEATRICAL

MILDRED & ROUCLERE

Mildred and Rouclere Company appeared at the Grand last evening in the second performance of their three day engagement in Peterborough.

Rouclere who is known the world over as the Master of Mystery, certainly lived up to his title and surprised the audience with his wonderful feats of manipulation. One of the most astonishing feats was borrowing a watch from a lady which he placed in an envelope and made the time piece disappear. The watch was later found attached to the neck of a small guinea pig which was in a small box suspended from the stage.

Miss "Billie Rouclere and Douglas Raymond made a big hit with the crowd in their singing, dancing and piano act.

Mildred stars in the wonderful telepathic scene which is one of the most bewildering acts the Peterborough people have witnessed for some time. This lady answers any question or describes articles which the public audience wish to ask her. She is a wonder in her art.

Richard Leggett in his vaudeville act which is entitled the "Rising Generation" is one of the most unique stunts ever performed on a stage.

The concluding act was the Flight of Princess Iris introduced by Mildred and Rouclere, and as on Thursday night, the audience left the Opera House bewildered and perplexed.

HOLLY SHEPARD SUCCESSFUL WITH ORILLIA MINSTRELS

Orillia News Letter—The Minstrel Show at the Opera House last night under the auspices of the Orillia General Hospital, and produced by local talent under the direction of Mr. Holly Shepard, was most successful and was attended by nearly 1000 people, who enjoyed every minute of the performance.

Shortly after 8 o'clock the curtain went up and the fifty performers gorgeously attired marched in and arranged themselves in position for the first part. The gorgeous costumes rich colorings, artistic draperies, all harmonizing, made as pretty a stage setting as one would wish to see.

The performance itself was splendid throughout and that such excellent results were secured in less than two weeks speaks volumes for the ability of Mr. Shepard, "the man who makes minstrels" as a director and for the performers, who took their parts in a manner that would do credit to any professional company There was not a dull moment from the beginning to the end. The gags were new and laughable, while the choruses were excellent. In getting the performance perfected Mr. Shepard was ably assisted by his wife, who is an artist in things musical.

Tokio will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the accession of the present Japanese emperor to the throne by building a system of sewers costing more than $17,000,000.

WHY A WATCH WEARS OUT

Neglect is responsible for most Watches going wrong. A Watch should be thoroughly overhauled, at least once a year. Dust collecting in a Watch causes it to run dry, the grit will then wear away the delicate bearings. If you own a good watch, better be on the safe side — Bring it to our Repair Department where it will receive Skilled Attention.

BUSINESS BEFORE BOARD OF WORKS

Mr. J. O. Fife, a real estate dealer waited on the Board of Works last night in support of the petition for a sidewalk and sewer on Princess st. On motion of Ald. Johnston and Graham, a cement sidewalk will be built on the south side of Princess street from Park street to Lock.

The question of arranging for the street watering for this year was left in the hands of the chairman and street commissioners.

Contracts were awarded for supplying sewer pipe and castings for the city engineer.

A report was read from the City Engineer, regarding an application of the Bell Telephone Company to place three poles in the south side of Victoria Avenue, west of Downie street between McDonnell and Walnut streets, and two on the south side of Aberdeen Ave. The matter was left in the hands of the chairman and city engineer.

BOOK CENSOR NEXT?

British Authors Up In Arms Against the Latest Bogey.

At the very time when the well-wishers of the British drama are preparing a petition to King George for the abolition of the theatrical censorship, authors are threatened by a similar bogey.

The well-kept secret came out when a deputation of publishers and newspaper editors waited upon Home Secretary McKenna to protest against the circulation of poisonous print. It was left to Edmund Gosse to point out that not a single author was included in the deputation, an extraordinary omission in view of the nature of the protest lodged with the Minister of the Crown.

The Home Secretary promised a more rigorous enforcement of the present law in regard to the suppression of demoralizing literature, and expressed the hope that the bill which had been drafted to carry out the recommendations of the Joint Select Committee on this subject would shortly become law. In effect, the recommendations of this bill will constitute a literary censorship, quite apart from the amateur censorship established by the various large lending libraries in 1908.

It is the duty of the police to prosecute the vendors of obviously obscene books, a duty that has been rather neglected in recent years, and the Home Secretary is now conferring with Sir Edward Henry, the Commissioner of Police, with a view to speeding up police action.

All reputable authors are anxious to make common cause with the authorities in the suppression of poisonous print. What authors are afraid of is the interference of Government officials with the fearless development of fiction along new and unconventional lines such as H. G. Wells is identified with. As the most effective censorship is public opinion, most authors feel it would be a retrograde step to establish a kind of Star Chamber, where books could be suppressed before they had received the verdict of the readers.

The Home Secretary forsees difficulties, for he said. "The great stumbling-block has always been the argumentative person who wants to draw a rigid line between the artistic and the obscene." In other words, there is a danger, if the new bill becomes law, of fine literature being sacrificed to merely "goody-goody" susceptibilities. If Mr. McKenna is granted facilities for his bill during the present overloaded Parliamentary session, the spokesmen for the authors in the House of Commons, such as Sir Gilbert Parker and Stephen Gwynne, will put up a good fight to keep the literary craft free from undue official control. There is also a censorship proposed for picture theatres, but in that the proposal meets with support from all the reputable men concerned.

Lloyd-George Smiles.

It is to Julius Caesar th: spinsters owe their gratitude as the inventor of Leap Year, although it was left to St. Patrick of Ireland—so legend records—to decree that for all time women should have the right of making Leap Year proposals to men of their choosing. But even Julius Caesar, in his moments of calendar calculation, could never have dreamed what a difference his plan of giving an extra day to every fourth year would make in the ages to come to the little island he once conquered. Some idea of what Leap Year really means in modern England, so far as commerce is concerned, may be obtained from the following figures. The extra day of Leap Year is worth over $17,500,000 in imports and exports, based upon the annual trade returns of the United Kingdom. During the working hours of Leap Year Day, Feb. 29, something like $200,000,000 will pass through that wonderful centre of the banking world the London Clearing House. The Chancellor of the Exchequer no doubt rubs his hands when he thinks of Leap Year Day, for it implies the following approximate increases in some of the revenue collecting departments:

Customs and excise	$1,000,000
Postoffice and telegraph service	330,000
Estate duties	345,000
Stamp duties...	130,000

Of course, there are national expenses for one more day, but the country's balance-sheet receives roughly, on the day, $400,000 upon the credit side.

ONE YEAR WHEN THERE WAS NO SUMMERTIME

People who felt depressed on account of the recent weather had much less reason to complain than the early settlers of this country.

The Farmer's Sun in 1901 interviewed Benjamin D. Waldbrook, of the township of Trafalgar, in Halton county, who is described as "a man whose memory forms one of the most complete links connecting the Ontario of to-day with the Ontario of pioneer times." "The spring of 1816," he told a representative of the Sun, "was probably as promising as is the outlook to-day. But the brilliant promise of early summer in that season was speedily followed by the blackness of despair. That was the 'summerless year.' Snow commenced falling in the middle of June; by the middle of August it was a foot in depth, and from the first fall in June until the following spring, the earth remained under the covering of the wintry blanket. Absolutely nothing in the way of harvest was garnered, everything in the way of crops rotting in the ground. What did people live on? Meat—and fish. There was no vegetation and there was no flour. It was venison and fish to-day, relieved by fish and and the flesh taken from slaughtered cattle, for which there was no sustenance, all winter through. My father did not come in until the following spring, but when he came the country was still full of stories of the horror of the year-long winter which had just passed away. One of these from whom father heard particulars of this dreadful period was the late Sheff Conkrite. Mr. Conkrite was nine years old at the time, and he told father that his people lived through the long winter on porcupines, ground hogs and any other meat they could get. Hay was shipped from Ireland to save the starving cattle about Quebec, and it sold there at $47 per ton. Even the next spring when father arrived flour was selling at $17 per barrel at Quebec, and potatoes were a penny a pound.

But that was not the only bad year that the settlers had cause to remember. "Even in my own book," continued Mr. Walbrook, "we have had something almost as bad as the summerless year. The army worm swept over the land like a plague of locusts in '33. The pests appeared in countless millions. The roads and fences were covered to the depth of—" and Mr. Waldbrook laid his hand on the table to show the thickness of the covering. "The worms swarmed over the trees," the speaker went on, "and they were soon as bare in midsummer as they ordinarily are in midwinter. Even at the doors of the houses, unless the broom was kept going constantly, the insects would collect like a swarm of bees. The condition in which the growing grain was left may be imagined. What was left were barely fit for hog feed.

"Early in the thirties there came also a visitation of frogs. The frogs came down with showers, falling from a clear sky. They descended in thousands. I remember as a lad how I jumped when they fell on me. But this was not all. The continual raining, with the blazing sun and decaying frogs gave us a West India climate in this province. The air was poisoned with decaying matter, and then pestilence stalked through the land. Almost every home was visited by the cholera, and the victims were numbered by hundreds."

LITTLE GIRL WAS BITTEN BY DOG

Thursday afternoon, about four o'clock the little daughter of Mr. Lee, local manager of the Canadian Machine Telephone Co., was severely bitten by a dog with which she was playing. The animal which is usually a quiet one, suddenly turned on the little one and badly lacerated one of its cheeks. Dr. McCulloch was summoned and the little one's injuries were attended to. She was very feverish this morning, but is doing as well as could be expected. Lindsay Post.

WILLIAM DEWART, THE FATHER OF PROTECTION FOR CANADA

A traveller passing through the village of Fenelon Falls, Ont., forty years ago, could not have failed to visit the "general store," — not because there was anything to distinguish this institution from a hundred others of its type scattered through the backwoods of the province—but because the "store" was the village moot, towards which all roads ran and all feet turned. In spite of himself the traveller was forced, by the laws of tradition to cross the sacred threshold. Inside stood the groups of farmers, gossiping or driving bargains. The "cracker" barrel was not missing, nor the jars containing the attenuated sticks of stripped candy. In brief, the "general store" deserved its name.

Behind the counter stood a man who said little and listened a great deal. He was about forty years old, and slightly gray. Steady, cool eyes under straight heavy brows, a straight nose, a long and rigid upper lip, these were his facial characteristics.

A baby came in to purchase a cent's worth of nuts. The transaction was made with due formality. A boy dashed in with the family molasses jug. It was filled. A farmer's wife set the basket on the counter and the man behind it gravely counted the eggs, and weighed the butter which it contained. Next came the village loafer to wheedle a plug of tobacco out of its case. He did not get it. A girl tripped in for a yard of ribbon, which she obtained, with extra measure for her good looks.

Closing time came. The blinds were drawn, the display goods were brought inside and the door was barred. All lights were put out save one at the desk. The storekeeper trimmed it and sat down. What book was that in his hand? It was not necessary to look a second time.

It was Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," which came from the hand of the author after eleven years self-imposed exile. The storekeeper read on, but he seldom turned a page. Finallym he laid the book down and sat with the look of intense abstraction which overcasts the countenance of the chronic thinker. By and by he took up his pen and began to write. The sentences flowed away from the rapidly moving point, clear, concise, effective, like the measured blows of a hammer. He had something to write and he wrote it. There was a vast difference between this man and those who write to fill space, or to see their names in print. In the village, lights were out for hours. The storekeeper made his last period and went to bed.

That man was William Dewart, whose articles, published first in 1874, and later sent out in booklet form by the Manufacturers' Association of Ontario, played an important part in crystallizing the National Policy and in electing the Conservatives to power in 1878. The articles appeared in the form of letters to the Canadian Illustrated News and attracted attention from all classes. In 1874 Mr. Dewart became convinced that Protection would be the next great political problem in Canada, and decided to do his best to secure it for the manufacturers of his country. There are no free traders in Canada. The only point at issue is the determination of the degree of Protection. The wonderful prosperity of Canada under the National Policy and the recent decision of the people to adhere to it are striking proofs of the excellence of Mr. Dewart's political and economic opinions.

William Dewart was born in Dummer, Ontario, on July 4th, 1836. His father, John Dewart, a prosperous farmer, had a family of ten children. Three brothers of William Dewart, John, Henry and James Dewart, now reside in Dummer, and are regarded as among the most prosperous farmers of that community.

By the time he was seventeen he had prepared himself to teach school, and taught for six years. At present his niece, the daughter of his brother, James Dewart, in teaching in the same school where he began to teach sixty years or so ago. When he left the profession he went into the merchandise business and conducted a general store at Fenelon Falls, for twenty years. William Dewart was a close student on all public questions of the time and manifested a great interest in affairs pertaining to the development of Canada. He had always been a supporter of the Liberal party until about 1873, when he saw that the free trade policy of the Mackenzie Administration was disastrous to the best interests of Canada, causing great distress to the country's finances and particularly to the manufacturing interests. Under the Mackenzie Administration's free trade policy, the country was being flooded with the products of the factories of the United States. Mr. Dewart, whose party spirit was high, hoped that the Mackenzie Administration could be induced to change their policy toward protecting Canadian manufacturers; but, when they absolutely refused to do this, he left the party and identified himself with the Conservative party. In 1874 he commenced his series of letters on "Protection for Canada."

He said that what was good for the manufacturers of the United States would be good for the Canadian industries. Many were the protests and threats he received, but he did not cease advocating a doctrine that resulted in upsetting the interests of many Americans who, had become so interwoven with the Mackenzie Administration that the task of dislodging them seemed well nigh impossible. These difficulties however, only acted as a stimulant to this earnest advocate of protection for Canadian industries.

In 1874, at Fenelon Falls, Hector Cameron, of Toronto, who was elected as Member of Parliament from the Victoria riding, introduced William Dewart at political meetings as "The Father of Protection for Canada." Citizens and visitors to Fenelon Falls continued to meet at "the store" to discuss questions of political import. It was significant that persons who found themselves "getting into deep water," concluded by saying, "Well, I am not much at this kind of thing, but Dewart there can answer any questions you want to ask and prove to you that I am right."

When it was proposed to build the Victoria Railway from Lindsay to Haliburton, it was William Dewart who spent his time and money in securing the necessary bonus to enable the accomplishment of this enterprise. The road is now a branch of the Grand Trunk System. Mr. James Ross, of Montreal, then a young man, was one of the engineers. "The store" was the meeting place for the men engaged on the construction of the road after the day's work was done. Among them James Ross was often seen.

Mr. Dewart was an educationalist, a geological student, and a student of chemistry. His collection of minerals was extensive.

In 1859, he married Miss Jessie Graham, daughter of Robt. Graham, who lived at Smith, near Peterborough, Ontario. They had eleven children, seven of whom are living.

About 1880 he moved to Rochester, N.Y., and lived there until 1901, since which time he has lived in Montclair, New Jersey. He continues to manifest a deep interest in the growth and prosperity of Canada, and followed very closely the progress made in the recent election. When he learned that the policy of protection had been again adopted by Canadians his happiness was complete, and his prediction for Canadas' future is, that "she has before her, under the guidance of the party that created the policy of protection for Canadian industries, which policy is the result of Canada's prosperity to-day, over against the free trade policy of the Mackenzie Administration, which resulted in the most disastrous and distressing experience in Canadian history—Canada has to-day a future before her that has in it prosperity and development beyond the fondest dreams of the most sanguine."

Mr. Dewart's case is an illustration of how nature likes to play tricks with the people who occupy high places. Was it not one of the strangest things in the strange history of Canada, that these brilliant articles should come, not from the editorial offices of great national newspapers of the day, nor from the House of Commons, nor from the professors of the universities, nor from the members of the learned professions, but from the pen of an ex-schoolmaster, who had become a village storekeeper, and who read and wrote between the visits of his customers?

DIABETES

Is one of the most cruel maladies of which mankind is subject, the many complications arising from time to time, making life seem almost unbearable. For many diseases, medical, scientific, and physiological knowledge and experience gained from years of deep research, has achieved remarkable results, but, up to now, little has been discovered of practical value in the treatment and cure of Diabetes. In fact, people have begun to look upon the disease as well-nigh incurable. Even in the medical profession can be found doctors who are of the same opinion, regarding sceptically any claim to ameliorate or improve the condition of a diabetic patient.

It can, however, be proved that SANSOL'S ANTIDIABETES lastingly cures all cases of Diabetes. Full particulars can be obtained from the Sansol Mfg. Co., Winnipeg, Man.

ONTARIO LEADS IN DEPORTATIONS

The number of immigrants so objectionable that their deportation has been ordered has not been very large when the total immigration is taken into account, but it is large enough to have created the opinion in some quarters that stricter and more rigid tests should be applied at the port of entry.

A study of the deportation statistics issued by the Department of the Interior reveals several significant features. From December, 1902, to March 31, 1910, there were 4,667 deportations. There were 2,694 English persons deported, or over one-half of the total. Of United States, new comers, 433 were deported. Scots deported numbered 413, Irish 141, and Bulgarians were fifth with 139. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1911, 340 English were deported, 196 Americans and 90 Scots.

Ontario has since December, 1902, deported twice as many persons as Manitoba, Saskatchewna and Alberta combined. Ontario deported 2,071 as against a combined total for the Prairie province of 1,054. The lower Provinces deported 90 in the nine years. Quebec 1,183 ,and British Columbia 207. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1911, Ontario deportations totalled 349, Quebec 165, and the Prairie provinces 201.

THOSE REJECTED.

The number of rejections at the ports of arrival since 1902 has been 7,528. For the year ending last March it was 2,210, the largest on record. The number of immigrants detained for further inspection was also the largest on record, being 8,457 as largest on record, being 8,457, as against 7,202 for the previous fiscal year. Over 55,000 have been detained since 1902. This number represents a percentage of rejections for Canadian immigration ports of 1.6 per cent. The report of Commissioner Williams, at Ellis Island shows that in the year ending June 20, 1911, deportions numbered 14,000 or two per cent of the total. Of the 740,000 aliens inspected 144,000 were held for further inspection and inquiry. Thus the Ellis Island record shows 89 per cent. of immigrants to have been specially examined, while the Canadian special detention has been only 4.0 of the total. Of course, the standard of immigrants from Canada, and the United States is radically different, about seventy per cent. of the American immigration coming from south and south-eastern Europe, where standards of life and morals are exceedingly low.

The number of rejections along the Canadian border was 15,000, the largest yet. The barring from entrance to Canada via United States of the undesirables is very difficult to thoroughly enforce, owing to the vast extent of the boundary line. The number of rejections for the past fiscal year was double the number of the previous year.

NERVOUS DISEASES IN THE SPRING

Cured by Toning the Blood and Strengthening the Nerves

It is the opinion of the best medical authorities, after long observation, that nervous diseases are more common and more serious in the spring than at any other time of the year. Vital changes in the system, after long winter months, may cause much more trouble than the familiar spring weakness and weariness from which most people suffer is the result of indoor life, in poorly ventilated and often overheated buildings. Official records prove that in April and May, neuralgia, St. Vitus' dance, epilepsy and other forms of nerve troubles are at their worst, and that then, more than any other time, a blood-restoring tonic is needed.

The antiquated custom of taking purgatives in the spring is useless, for the system really needs strengthening, while purgatives only gallop through the bowels, leaving you weaker. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine, for they actually make the new, rich red blood that feeds the starved nerves, and thus cure the many forms of nervous disorders. They cure also such other forms of spring troubles as headaches, poor appetite, weakness in the limbs, as well as remove unsightly pimples and eruptions. In fact they unfailingly bring new health and strength to weak, tired and depressed men, women and children.

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Trainmen Killed.

Vancouver, April 12.—C.P.R. train No. 3 eastbound, which left the city at six o'clock Wednesday evening was wrecked yesterday morning three miles east of Savona, which is a station a short distance this side of Kamloops. Engineers Walker and Fireman Hoskinson of Kamloops were so badly injured that they died within a short time.

The engine and three express cars left the rails.

No passengers were hurt. The wreck was caused by a rockside, the rocks apparently having come down but a few minutes before the arrival of the train.

They now know that Zutoo is different.

THE AMERICAN DISEASE.

Indigestion, Chronic and Acute, and the Digestive Organs.

Indigestion, a phase of dyspepsia which has been called the American disease, is very common, and its disagreeable symptoms are but too well known. Chronic indigestion, or dyspepsia, is very prevalent, and in medical phrase an acute disease is opposed to chronic in the sense that while a chronic disease runs a long time the acute form is attended with severe symptoms and is likely to come speedily to a crisis.

Acute indigestion, therefore, is a condition in which the digestive organs, because they are either naturally weak or are worn out, overworked or temporarily abused, fail to perform their functions and the whole system is thrown "out of gear." This may be due primarily and directly to overeating or to eating improper food, to gorging the stomach with inadequately masticated food, to retarding its normal action with too much liquid or to other local influences.

In cases of acute indigestion or dyspepsia there generally is intense pain, often followed by sickness and vomiting of the surplus or offensive matter by which the stomach seeks to correct the effects of abuse and regain a normal condition. But it does not always succeed. Other measures of relief also fail, the machinery breaks down, and death ensues.

The main difference between chronic dyspepsia and acute indigestion is that one is slow death and the other quick. The moral as to dietetic habits, eating and drinking, is too obvious to need pointing out.—Indianapolis News.

AWED BY NAPOLEON.

Queer Impression the Emperor Made Upon Countess Potocka.

We waited rather long, and it must be acknowledged our curiosity was not unmingled with fright. Of a sudden the silence was broken by a swift rumor, the wings of the door opened noisily, and M. de Talleyrand advanced, with a loud and intelligible voice uttering the magic word that made the world tremble, "The emperor." Immediately Napoleon made his appearance and halted for a minute as if to be admired.

So many portraits exist of this astonishing man, his history has been so much written about, all the stories told by the children of his old soldiers will live so long, that the generations to come will know him almost as well as ourselves. But what will be difficult to grasp is how deep and unexpected the impression was which those felt who saw him for the first time.

As for me, I experienced a sort of stupor, a mute surprise, like that which seizes one at the aspect of a prodigy. It seemed to me that he wore an aureole. The only thought I could frame when I recovered from this first shock was that such a being could not possibly die; that such a mighty organization, such a stupendous genius, should never perish. I inwardly awarded him double immortality.—From the Memoirs of the Countess Potocka.

Boycott Leeds Street Cars.

Leeds, April 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Owing to the city authorities refusing to decline liquor advertisements for street cars, the teetotallers have declared a boycott of cars. Seventy-five million tickets yearly are issued on the cars each bearing a brewery advertisement. The authorities regard the boycott philosophically, declaring it will break down on the first wet day.

Good Roads For Welland.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 12.—Welland County will build many miles of improved roads this year. Members of the board of works arrived home yesterday from a trip to Michigan, where they inspected pavements with the view of deciding upon the most suitable material for constructing the city extension through the city to the new road through the county.

Marine insurance on the great lakes will be reduced.

EARNED HIS PROMOTION

DUNCAN MACPHERSON IS R. W. LEONARD'S DEPUTY.

Capable Engineer of the National Transcontinental Has Spent Six Years In Charge of the Work and Knows It From A to Z—He is Widely Known as an Engineer, Surveyor and Inventor.

Duncan Macpherson, who has recently been appointed assistant to R. W. Leonard, chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, is one of the best known civil engineers of the Dominion and he has been assistant to the chief engineer of the commission for some six years so that he is thoroughly familiar with all the details of the big railway undertaking.

His promotion is an important one, however, and means that during the absence of the chairman that he will have complete control of the work of this important department. The position is a new one but Chairman Leonard desires to make the commission more efficient and to allow him to have more time to attend to important work outside of headquarters, he desires an assistant with thorough knowledge of the details and in Duncan Macpherson he feels certain that he has such a man. The new assistant chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway was born at Bath in 1853 and comes of United Empire Loyalist parentage. He was educated at Napanee High School and the Royal Military College, Kingston, graduating from the latter in June, 1880, standing head of the class in civil engineering, and taking high honors in several other subjects and being the winner of Lord Lorne's silver medal for general proficiency. This class was the original of 18 students entering at the inception of the college in 1876 and has been known ever since as the "old eighteen." In November, 1880, he was employed as rodman on the surveys for the extension of the Canada Central, which in 1881 was merged into the C.P.R. He remained on location and construction for the C.P.R. for several years and in various capacities and was subsequently given the position of resident engineer on maintenance of way and construction of branch lines, starting with a territory of about 400 miles. He was afterwards promoted to division engineer with duties and responsibilities continually increasing until he was given charge of the whole eastern division, comprising 1,500 miles of main track.

He resigned from the C.P.R. in 1905 after serving some 25 years with that corporation and accepted the position of assistant chief engineer of the National Transcontinental Railway, a position he has held with marked ability until his recent promotion as assistant chairman of the commission with a seat at the board and ranking next in authority to the chairman.

He holds a certificate as a Dominion land surveyor, and an Ontario land surveyor, and is a life member of the English Institute of Civil Engineers, and a charter member of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, and he is also a member of the American Railway Engineering Association. He is a past president of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers and is at present a member of the council of that body, having been recently elected to that office for the 14th time, a unique honor in the history of the association. He is also noted as the inventor of the Macpherson safety switch and frog, which gives a solid continuous main line and which is in use in Canada, the United States and Australia and some of these frogs have been in use on the C.P.R. for 14 years without renewal.

When Dickens Bought Coal.

Coal was "up" in March, 1839, when Dickens was in the neighborhood of Exeter arranging for the comfort of his parents in a cottage he had provided for them. "Coals are dear just now—26 shillings a ton," he wrote to Mitton. Boy labor, however, was not, for he goes on: "They found me a boy to go two miles out and back again to order some (coals) this morning. I was debating in my mind whether I should give him 18 pence or 2 shillings when his fee was announced—twopence!"—London Chronicle.

TRIED EVERYTHING WITHOUT RELIEF

Until I took "Fruit-a-tives"

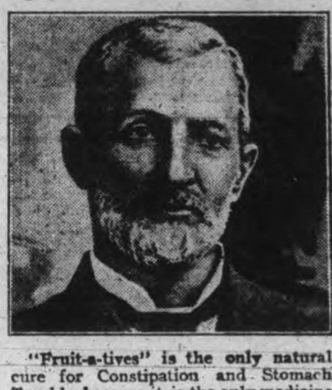
SARNIA, ONT., Feb. 5th, 1910.

"I have been a sufferer for the past 25 years with Constipation, Indigestion and Catarrh of the Stomach. I tried many remedies and many doctors but derived no benefit whatever.

Finally, I read an advertisement of 'Fruit-a-tives'. I decided to give 'Fruit-a-tives' a trial and found they did exactly what was claimed for them.

I have now taken 'Fruit-a-tives' for some months and find that they are the only remedy that does me good.

I have recommended 'Fruit-a-tives' to a great many of my friends and I cannot praise these fruit tablets too highly" PAUL J. JONES



"Fruit-a-tives" is the only natural cure for Constipation and Stomach Trouble, because it is the only medicine in the world that is made of fruit juices and valuable tonics. Hundreds of people have been cured, as if by a miracle, by taking "Fruit-a-tives", the famous fruit medicine.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At dealers, or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

The Pulse Watch.

Among the ingenious devices for the physician may be mentioned a watch constructed on the "stop" principle whereby the number of pulse beats per minute may be indicated. A push button is pressed at the beginning of the count and again at the twentieth pulsation, when the number of beats per minute is shown on a dial without the necessity for calculation. Still another push on the button brings the counter back to the starting point. In the ordinary method of taking the pulse the observer is obliged to do two things at the same time—count the beats and keep his eye on the second hand of his watch. With the pulse watch only one operation is necessary, the counting of the pulsation up to twenty, when the push button is pressed.—New York Press.

English Earthquakes.

English earthquakes are not uncommon, but we can rejoice that they have decreased in severity, for the damage done nowadays is as nothing compared with the ravages wrought by early English earthquakes. In 1580, for instance, part of St. Paul's cathedral was wrecked by an earthquake shock, and at an earlier date Glastonbury abbey had been completely destroyed. Staffordshire, where the latest shock was felt, would appear to be the earthquake area of England, for shocks were also felt there in 1903. Even as recently as 1884, however, an English earthquake was severe enough to require a mansion house fund to repair its ravages in the eastern counties.—London Chronicle.

London Street Beggars.

Speaking of the swarm of beggars and "panhandlers" in the English metropolis, the London Times says: "The streets of London never fail to attract the professional beggar and never disappoint him. The Mendicity society tells us that a beggar can earn more than the wages of the average workingman and that 'it is probably no exaggeration to say that well over $500,000 is given away haphazard to beggars in the streets of London every year.'"

SCIATICA
EXPECTED DEATH ANY DAY

Another Case Where Life Was Saved and Health Restored by "Nerviline."

It is because he feels it his solemn duty to tell to the world his faith in Nerviline that Victor P. Hires makes the following declaration: "For three years I was in the Royal Mail service, and in all kinds of weather had to meet the night trains. Dampness, cold, and exposure brought on sciatica that affected my left side. Sometimes an attack would come on that made me powerless to work. I was so nearly a complete cripple that I had to give up my job. I was in despair, completely cast down because the money I spent on trying to get well was wasted. I was speaking to my chemist one day, and he recommended "Nerviline." I had this good liniment rubbed on several times a day, and got relief. In order to build up my general health and improve my blood I used Ferrozone, one tablet with each meal. I continued this treatment four months and was cured. I have used all kinds of liniments, and can truthfully say that Nerviline is far stronger, more penetrating, and infinitely better than anything else for relieving pain. I urge everyone with lumbago, neuralgia, rheumatism, or sciatica to use Nerviline. I know it will cure them."

CURED SIX YEARS

There isn't a more highly-esteemed citizen in Westchester than Mr. Hires. What he says can be relied upon. For six years since being cured he hasn't had a single relapse. Don't accept anything from your dealer but "Nerviline." 50 cents per bottle, trial size, 25c; sold everywhere, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR

FIRST PRINTER'S DEVIL.

He Was a Young Negro Slave Employed by Aldus Manutius.

Aldus Manutius, who in 1488 set up his office in Venice, has long been famous as the first of the publishers of the famous Aldine classics, which today are so highly prized by book collectors. He was the author of a Latin grammar, a Greek dictionary and a treatise on the metrical methods of the poet Horace and originated the form of type known by us as Italic and by German printers as "cursive" type.

He is also said to be responsible for the name of "printer's devil," almost worldwide in its application to the youngest boy in the office. A young negro slave employed in his office who was so very black and dirty that his natural ugliness had become an almost fiendish expression became feared and known all over Venice as "the little black devil," and Manutius at last realized that the boy and himself had dangerously awakened the superstitious fears and dislike of the more ignorant Venetians. He accordingly formally exhibited him during a whole day on the public streets and had the criers make this proclamation throughout the city:

"I, Aldus Manutius, printer to the holy church and the doge, have this day made public exposure of the printer's devil. All who think he is not flesh and blood may come and prick him."—Charles Winslow Hall in National Magazine.

Don't Call It Slang.

A Cleveland man who has lived for a number of years recently got it into his head that he might die one of these days and that it would be well if he wrote his autobiography ere that sad event occurred, as one might say. So he sat down and wrote many pages and took those pages to a local publisher. After the manuscript had been in the latter's hands for some time the author called him up.

"This is Bjones," he explained genially.

"Who's Bjones?" came the reply.

"Bjones, you know—Bjones of East Umpth street, whose autobiography you are publishing. Ah—I'm a little short this week. Could you let me have something in advance?"

"Not on your life!"

And you may think the printer was slangy, but he wasn't.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Split Infinitives.

To sometimes in an emergency or when laboring under a great mental stress split an infinitive may be excusable, but to deliberately or wantonly or with malice prepense tear its parts asunder or to cruelly divorce the helpless and dependent "to" from her verbal spouse is severely condemned by purists. The general practice, however, is said to have prevailed among standard English authors since the seventeenth century.—Boston Globe.

A Fighting Chance.

"So you think the author of this play will live, do you?" remarked the tourist.

"Yes," replied the manager of the Frozen Dog Opera House. "He's got a five mile start, and I don't think the boys kin ketch him."—Life.

Including the Wedding Fee.

Mrs. Chubb (with newspaper)—I see several persons are petitioning to have their names changed. What does it cost to have a name changed? Mr. Chubb—It cost me a couple of hundred to have your named changed to mine.—Boston Transcript.

As to Clocks.

"What an elegant timepiece that is," said the old time friend.

"Yes," replied Mr. Cumrox; "that's about as elegant a clock as money will buy."

"You were once content with a much simpler affair."

"Of course. Nobody wants to waste more than a dollar on a clock that wakes him up and tells him when to go to work. But when it wakes him up and reminds him that he doesn't have to go to work he feels more friendly and liberal."—Washington Star.

A Woman's Reason.

"Why," asks the inquisitive person, "do you enjoy having some one tell you that you are pretty when you know you are not? Does it make you believe that you are?"

"No," she answers readily. "But it makes me believe that he believes I am."—Judge's Library.

After Years of Suffering. Tells How Her Health Was Regained.

Waurika, Okla.—"I had female troubles for seven years, was all run down, and so nervous I could not do anything. The doctors treated me for different things but did me no good. I got so bad that I could not sleep day or night. While in this condition I read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and began its use and wrote to you for special advice. In a short time I had regained my health and am now strong and well."—Mrs. SALLIE STEVENS, R.F.D., No. 2, Comanche, Okla.

ANIMALS THAT COUNT.

Magpies, Rooks and Apes Can't Get Past the Number Four.

There are human beings, such as inhabitants of the Murray islands, in the strait of Torres, that cannot count further than two. But, most surprising still, most animals possess calculating abilities, and several have a distinct appreciation of number. In certain mines of Hainault the horses are so used to traversing the same road thirty times that after their last round they go to the stable of their own accord and refuse to take another step. Montaigne says that the oxen employed in the royal gardens of Susa for turning the wheels to which the water pails were attached absolutely refused to make more than a hundred rounds, which constituted their daily task.

A close observer has definitely established the fact that magpies and rooks cannot count further than four. A rook never returns to its nest until it is quite satisfied that there is no danger near. When four hunters or less departed in succession from a nearby log cabin the rook would return to its nest after the last had gone out of sight. But whenever there were more the bird lost count and returned to its nest even while some were still in the hut.

Similarly apes do not count further than four, and the Boers of the Transvaal when they want to hunt these animals hide in numbers exceeding four. Four depart in succession in such a manner as to be noticed by the apes, who then come forth and are easily captured.—Chi[illegible]

JUST ONE MORE SPLENDID CURE

Rheumatism Was Vanquished by Dodd's Kidney Pills

Amable Lamarche Tells How His Kidney Disease Developed and how He got Relief When He Used the One Sure Cure.

Lafaivre, Ont., April 12 — Special.—Another splendid cure by Dodd's Kidney Pills is the talk of this village. Mr. Amable Lamarche is the person cured and the cure is vouched for by his numerous friends.

"It was a sprain and a cold that was the beginning of my trouble," Mr. Lamarche says in telling his story. "I could not sleep my, appetite was fitful and I felt heavy and sleepy after meals I was always thirsty, had a bitter taste in my mouth and perspired freely. My limbs were heavy and I had a dragging sensation across the loins.

"When my symptoms developed into rheumatism I realized that my kidneys were the cause of the trouble and I started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. Six boxes made me a well man."

Kidney trouble quickly develops into painful and often fatal diseases. To ensure good health, cure the first symptoms with Dodd's Kidney Pills. They never fail.

INSTEAD OF FLANNEL.

Virtues of Half Cotton Cashmere Are Manifold.

"There is one material," said the wise house mother, "which to the modern woman takes the place of the old fashioned heavy flannel for undergarments and even for negligees without having the disadvantage of bulk and a great capacity for shrinkage if it has to be sent to the laundry often. That is a half cotton cashmere, which can usually be bought in white and delicate colors for 25 cents a yard, yard wide. It washes beautifully and wears so well that to put a little handiwork on it will prove no waste of time, while the proportion of wool in it gives the needed warmth.

"One of the prettiest and best wearing kimonos I ever had was made from the half cotton cashmere in pale blue. The color was a trifle more blue than I would have preferred at first, yet not at all garish. I trimmed it with two inch taffeta ribbon in the same robin's egg tint. It has done service for four years, having gone in and out of the tub unnumbered times, grawing softer and prettier—to my mind—every time. During the last year it has grown so pale in tint that I've had Margery use an extra allowance of bluing in the rinse water, but that has been all it needed to restore the charming color. When I say 'growing softer,' by the way, I mean in texture as well as hue.

"For little embroidered underskirts or combinations this cashmere is most desirable, and I have seen a really Frenchy negligee made of the cream white variety, embroidered with heavy white and black floss and trimmed with a heavy creamy lace. When I say that there is almost no 'wear out' to it, I mean that to my personal knowledge four years of hard service from a garment made of it is none too much to expect."

An Afternoon Cup For the Sewing Meet.

If the afternoon cocoa served in place of tea at the sewing meet or at the little supper is especially delicious it might be well to inquire into its secret if such familiarity is warranted by acquaintance with the hostess. The mixture of some such delicious cup is often a surprise to women who have always supposed that chocolate is chocolate and cocoa cocoa. For instance, one woman flavors her cocoa with cinnamon, sherry and vanilla and often adds a cupful of strong coffee to the potful. And she gives a creamy consistency by using a tablespoonful of arrowroot for every quart of hot milk. Four tablespoonfuls of cocoa are allowed to this amount, and it is cooked slowly for twelve minutes with the cinnamon, arrowroot and about three tablespoonfuls of sugar. At the end of this time a tablespoonful of sherry is stirred in with a teaspoonful of vanilla and a saltspoonful of salt. Then the cocoa is whipped with a revolving egg beater until it is a mass of foam. The coffee, very strong, is turned in at the very last if it is wanted.

Cough Sirup.

The following is a family recipe for cough sirup: Have ready one stick of black licorice, 5 cents' worth of horehound, the juice and rinds of two lemons, one pint and a half of molasses and one large onion. Boil the horehound, the onion and the rind and juice of the lemons in a quart of water until the whole is reduced to one pint. Then pound the licorice to a powder and put it into the molasses. Let the two boil until the licorice has been dissolved in the molasses. Then strain into the other mixture and pour in into wide mouthed bottles. The bottles should have mouths that are large enough to permit the entrance of a spoon. The dose is one teaspoonful every two hours. For a very mild cold use only occasionally when needed.

ON THE BOSTON EXPRESS

An Assignment That Produced Unexpected Results.

By EDITH J. HULBERT.

Wentworth paused in the doorway and glanced carelessly over the car. Then he turned to the porter with an involuntarily sigh of relief.

"Either of these two vacant seats will do," he said.

The porter consulted his book.

"No. 12 is engaged, sah, but you can have 13."

"All right," said Wentworth, taking possession.

After his belongings had been fingered for the conventional length of time and the dusky official had retreated Wentworth looked at his watch.

"Five minutes to starting time," he murmured, "and no sign of her yet, for which fact the lady has my heartfelt gratitude.

"My, won't Collins be in a deuce of a funk, though! He seems to be uncommonly keen over the affair. I'll see what he says again." And, fumbling in his pocket, he produced a crumpled slip of paper.

Smoothing it out, he read half audibly: "Look out for Annette Blain on Boston express. She has wind of the state's intention to call her as a witness in the Brent murder trial and is going to cross the border. Is about twenty-two and slender, with brown hair and gray or blue eyes, timid manner, dresses well, but plainly. Get an interview with her and find out all she knows about the case. Don't let this slip. Should be a beat. Other papers not on."

"Nice thing to foist on a man just starting on a vacation," grumbled Wentworth. "Anyway I've been through all the cars—they're all jammed—and there's no such person in sight. That lets me out, and—Jove!"

The porter had come back, followed by a heavily veiled young woman in a long dark blue traveling coat. As she sank wearily into the seat opposite No. 13 a warning shriek came from the great engine, and the train puffed slowly out of the station.

Wentworth eyed her furtively, while the porter punctiliously arranged her luggage in the rack.

"My victim undoubtedly," he soliloquized. "Poor child! I wonder if she thinks that covering her face with a thick veil when the thermometer is 80 is a good way to escape notice. How had I best open up the attack? Moral certainty all's very well, but I'm afraid mine would become shaky if she should deny her identity. There's something about the poise of her head that indicates she'd have the nerve to do it, too, and I've really nothing to go by. Confound that veil!"

At this point a small leather hand bag obligingly slid off the newcomer's lap, and Wentworth promptly presented it to her with his best bow.

"Thank you," she murmured politely, but in a tone that distinctly discouraged any attempt at conversation on his part. He felt instinctively that it would not be advisable even to make any suggestions concerning the window or the chair. He resumed his seat and sulkily regarded the flying landscape for several minutes.

When he turned again, his vis-a-vis had thrown back her veil. As he looked at her Wentworth found it difficult to suppress an exclamation of amazement. She was so like and yet so unlike Collins' terse description of the fugitive witness. Slender she certainly was, twenty-two she might be, although sixteen would seem nearer the truth, and her manner was undoubtedly timid. But surely the phrase "brown hair" conveyed no adequate conception of those rippling, gold flecked chestnut waves that swept away from her broad white brow and were gathered in a loose coil at the nape of her neck. Surely the man who had told Collins about her "gray or blue eyes" never had picked violets diamonded with the dew of an early May morning. Surely no one but a brute could endure the thought of the delicate pink of those softly rounded cheeks deepening to scarlet and those exquisitely curved lips quivering under the pitiless fire of cross questioning from half a dozen lawyers regarding the hideous details of the Brent murder case.

Her testimony was not essential. The case of the state was sufficiently strong without it. Justice would lose nothing by her absence. Her flight was not only entirely honorable—it was a sacred duty she owed herself and her family.

Fortunately she was safe enough now. Soon after passing the next station they would cross the line into Connecticut, and there would be no question of further pursuit. If only she were a shade more approachable he was sure he could give her some valuable advice in the matter.

At this point in his reflections the train came to a full stop. "Why, we're there already," he muttered, glancing out of the window, and then involuntarily he smiled sympathetically at the girl.

She, however, did not seem to be at all in a mood to receive congratulations. She was very pale, her lips were twitching nervously, and when, just as the train started again, the porter entered the car, followed by the conductor, an expression of utter terror came into her eyes.

Evidently her fears were not altogether groundless. The two men went directly to her, and while the porter murmured consolingly. "Now, don't be afraid, miss; no one ain't gwine to hurt you," the conductor produced a telegraph form from which he read rapidly in a low tone.

Wentworth made no attempt to conceal the fact that he was listening.

"You see," said the conductor, handing her the paper, "these instructions are from police headquarters, so there is nothing for me to do but give you into custody at New Haven."

"Rubbish!" ejaculated Wentworth before the girl could speak. "If you do any such fool thing as that you'll find yourself in about the worst scrape you ever tackled. This young lady isn't charged with any crime, is she?"

The conductor shook his head doubtfully.

"Of course not. Well, you know quite as well as I do that you can't serve a subpoena out of the state. It's up to her to say whether she'll go back and be a witness in that beastly trial or not. That wire didn't come from police headquarters any more than you did. Let me see it."

Impressed by the decision of his manner, the conductor almost mechanically complied with his demand.

"Just as I thought," pursued Miss Blain's self constituted protector—"a pure fake. Haven't even got her name right. Spelled it with an 'r.'"

"How should it be spelled?" asked the porter.

"Why, with an 'n,' naturally," said Wentworth, with withering scorn.

"Do you know this gentleman?" asked the conductor, turning to the girl.

"I—that is,"— she began helplessly.

"Know me? Why, I'm one of her best friends," interposed Wentworth hastily, managing to give her elbow a surreptitious pressure. "I came on this train purposely to look after her, although she didn't know of my intention."

There was a moment's silence, during which the girl kept her face averted, the porter shuffled uneasily and Wentworth looked defiantly at the conductor, who shrugged his shoulders.

"Well," remarked that official at length, "I'm no lawyer or detective either, and I don't know whether that wire's straight or not, but I don't like to make things unpleasant for a lady. I can't interfere with the proper authorities if they come on at New Haven, but I don't know as it's my business to give 'em any help. Perhaps you can fix some plan between you." And, motioning to the porter to precede him, he passed on through the car.

The girl turned quickly to Wentworth.

"What did you mean," she asked, "by talking about my testifying in a case? Who do you think I am?"

"I don't think anything about it," said Wentworth. "I know you're Annette Blain, and you're leaving New York so you won't be obliged to appear at the Brent trial." And he glanced significantly at her luggage, on which the letters "A. B." appeared conspicuously in several places.

"Oh, no, I'm not. I'm Antoinette Blair, and I never heard of the Brent case. I'm simply running away from home to escape marrying a man I detest, and my guardian has found it out and sent that horrid wire. They'll keep me at New Haven until he gets there. I know they will."

Wentworth gave a low whistle.

"How old are you?" he asked abruptly.

"Nineteen."

Wentworth considered for a moment.

"See here," he said. "Will you trust yourself to me?"

Miss Blair smiled a little tremulously.

"It seems about the only thing for me to do," she said.

"Then listen. There's a flag station this side of New Haven. I'll fix the porter to stop the train there, and we'll slip off and take the next train back to some station where we can hire a trap to drive over and connect with the Central. I have an aunt living in Albany who'll be delighted to keep you for a few days until you can arrange your plans."

"How good you are!" murmured the girl fervently. "How can I ever repay you?"

Wentworth flashed an eloquent glance at her, whereat she blushed deeply and busied herself with her luggage.

The city editor of the Evening Star received two telegrams from Wentworth before he returned from his vacation.

The first was dated "Portchester" and read:

No trace of woman on express.

The second came from Albany a week later, and Collins groaned as he read:

Was married today in this city. Going Niagara. Back 24th. WENTWORTH.

"Another good man spoiled," sighed Collins.

This Coffee Pot FREE

Why Dalton's French Drip Coffee is so Wholesome, Delicious and Economical

When you have once tasted Dalton's delicious French Drip Coffee, made in a Dalton's French Drip Coffee Pot, you will never be tempted to drink ordinary boiled Coffee again.

The Coffee berry, or bean, is protected by nature from the insect world by a tough outer shell or husk which contains tannin and other acid, bitter principles which are poisonous to insects and certainly not wholesome to the human system.

Other roasters of Coffee do not remove this bitter husk, and this is why many people find that ordinary Coffee does not agree with them. Not only that, but the usual way of roasting Coffee in cylinders over coke or gas fires, drives off the volatile essences, so essential to aroma and flavor.

Dalton's French Drip Coffee

The DALTON way is to throw the Coffee berries against an intensely hot flame. This roasts them in half the time and prevents the volatile essences being driven off. Then the Coffee is cooled by a special process, during which a strong suction airblast blows off all foreign substances. Next comes the grinding, during which another powerful airblast removes the poisonous, bitter outer shell. The Coffee contains absolutely no chicory and is packed in sealed tins, which preserve all the delightful flavor.

We make Dalton's French Drip Coffee in two strengths Mild Blend and Strong Blend. You cannot tell however which you will like the best until you try both and that is why we ask you to buy two tins in our special offer.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER

We feel so sure that you will find either Dalton's Mild Blend or Strong Blend French Drip Coffee just the Coffee that you have been looking for that we have authorized your Grocer to give you one of these handsome pots (worth $1.30) absolutely Free with your first purchase of a tin each of Mild and Strong Blend. You buy two tins of our Coffee—one of each blend at 50c. per tin, to give it a fair trial, and we give you the means of testing it FREE, satisfied that you will use nothing but Dalton's French Drip Coffee thereafter.

Spelling Reform.

William H. Maxwell, superintendent of the New York city public schools, gives this illustration of the complexity of English orthography: "The sound of long o is represented in thirteen different spellings—so, boat, roe, oh, door, soul, though, low, owe, yeoman, sew, hautboy, beau." He urges colleges and universities to unite in reforming our spelling. But any change must be popularized, and to this end this suggestion has been made: Get the newspapers and magazines to agree to adopt a simpler spelling of, say, twenty-five words on Jan. 1, 1913; twenty-five more on Jan. 1, 1914, and so on, the pledge not to be binding unless a majority is secured.

Her Discovery.

"I have made a discovery," declared the bride.

The Baby's Pen.

In such a device a mother may place her little one, with its toys, and the child will be quite content for hours at a time, while the mother is saved worry and anxiety by knowing that her baby is safe.

Have you ever noticed an older person walking on the street pulling a child along by the arm? Have you stopped to remark on the way in which the little arm is held, so high that the child's whole weight is resting on the shoulder muscle which connects the arm to it? Or perhaps you are one of the groups who help children along in that way. If you are just stop to think of what you are doing.

The strain put on that young muscle, much more tender than is your own arm, for instance, is enough to cause the muscle to give way. No child should be hurried along. He knows just how fast he can walk, and it is only harmful to force or to drag him. Lifting him by the arm or arms in such a way might result in permanent injury.

Here is another suggestion to save the young muscles from overdoing: A child should never be allowed to lift or to carry anything which he cannot raise with the greatest ease. Such straining has been known to result in injury that undermined the health for a lifetime.

Tomato Bouillon.

Take a clear meat bouillon, beef preferred, and when it is done strain into it a clear essence of tomato. This is obtained by boiling tomatoes until they are tender without being mushy and straining the juice through a cloth. Govern the amount of tomato juice added to the bouillon by the desired strength of the broth. Season to taste and serve very hot. A dash of cayenne pepper adds to the value of the bouillon as an appetizer.

Fish Cakes.

Pick the cooked fish apart, being careful to free it entirely of bones. Reject the skin. Add to the shredded flesh half its amount of dried breadcrumbs and season to taste. Moisten with enough milk to allow the mixture to be molded into cakes and stir in an egg. Form into cakes about two inches in diameter and half an inch thick. Fry in hot lard as you would meat. Minced parsley makes an excellent garnishing.

ARCTIC INDIAN LIFE.

A Heroic Mother and Her Reward When Her Son Was Grown.

In "The Arctic Prairies," by Ernest Thompson Seton, a gruesome picture of Indian life is given in the following incident:

"One winter, forty or fifty years ago, a band of Algonquin Indians at Wayabimika all starved to death except one squaw and her baby. She fled from the camp, carrying the child, thinking to find friends and help at Nipigon House. She got as far as a small lake near Deer lake and there discovered a cache, probably in a tree. This contained one small bone fishhook. She rigged up a line, but had no bait.

"The wailing of the baby spurred her to action. No bait, but she had a knife. A strip of flesh was quickly cut from her own leg, a hole made through the ice, and a fine jackfish was the food that was sent to this devoted mother. She divided it with the child, saving only enough for bait. She stayed there living on fish until spring, then safely rejoined her people.

"The boy grew up to be a strong man, but was cruel to his mother, leaving her finally to die of starvation. Anderson knew the woman. She showed him the scar where she cut the bait."

ODD OLD CHOCTAW LAWS.

One Made the Selling of Their Land a Capital Crime.

In an old set of laws of the Choctaw Nation there is a clause which relates to the killing of witches. For witchcraft the penalty was death, and for alleging oneself to be a witch or for saying that any other person was one was punishable by sixty lashes on the bare back.

Another declared that no doctor could take money or any of the belongings of a patient he treated if the patient died. If the patient were raised up from a sickbed the doctor could accept what was offered to him, and if nothing was offered then he could take in goods what was his just compensation.

In 1834 the Choctaw council passed an act which made a person who bargained to sell any of the Choctaw land a traitor and punishable by death. Any white man who encouraged such action was deported. An Indian who sold or disposed of land either to individuals or to the United States in toto should be considered a traitor and shot on conviction. This was just preceding the beginning of the work of the Dawes commission.

Ocean Etiquette.

"He was almost a hero once. He plunged into the water to rescue a girl from a briny grave."

"And did he succeed in his noble purpose?"

"No; she wouldn't let him because they had not been introduced."

"Did she drown?"

"Not much. She swam ashore plumb disgusted. She was expecting another man to rescue her and he never wet his feet."

PROMINENT RAILROAD MAN

STRONGLY ADVISES HIS FRIENDS TO TRY GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS

"I have been a Pullman Conductor on the C. P. R. and Michigan Central during the last three years. About four years ago, I was laid up with intense pains in the groin, a very sore back, and suffered most severely when I tried to urinate. I treated with my family physician for two months for gravel in the bladder but did not receive any benefit. About that time, I met another railroad man who had been similarly affected and who had been cured by taking Gin Pills, after having been given up by a prominent physician who treated him for Diabetes. He is now running on the road and is perfectly cured. He strongly advised me to try Gin Pills which I did,—with the result that the pains left me entirely.

"My Business is Unique"

WE are told by the old-time circus men and dime-museum operators that good freaks used to command large salaries. Barnum's "dog-faced boy" is said to have drawn $200.00 a week—you see he was the only dog-faced boy in the world—he was unique.

Most of us—even if we could be freaks—would prefer to make our livelihood some other way. And, anyway, the "freak" stunt is about played out—even in the circus business.

It is surprising to find an otherwise hard-headed business man who takes a strange, abnormal joy in posing as a freak. He doesn't call it that, of course. He doesn't even know he is posing. Ponderously in earnest, he would not dream of describing his business as "freakish"—but delights in saying it is "unique"—which really amounts to the same thing.

Some manufacturers "play freak" only when talking to an advertising man. They keep that word "unique" tucked back under the tongue all ready for use whenever anyone suggests that they should advertise. "Oh, my business is unique—it cannot be advertised successfully."

Haven't you often heard it? Have you ever said it yourself?

Let us not try to qualify for the dime museum. Let us get down to selling goods. And selling goods—no matter what the goods are—is easier if the goods are advertised.

You say your proposition is "different"?

Very well, advertise it in a "different" way.

An Actual Experience That Completely Routs The "Unique" Theory

They market a product which their sales manager was wont to refer to as "the hardest thing in the world to advertise." But a persistent advertising man kept hammering at the door of skepticism, and he finally agreed to "test out" an advertising campaign. A twelve months' trial was agreed upon. To-day, at the end of 18 months, this firm is advertising on a much larger scale. Direct orders for the "hard-to-advertise" line are coming in steadily, and the advertising is looked upon by that sales manager as an all-important factor in his business-building.

Advice regarding your advertising problems is available through any good advertising agency, or the Secretary of the Canadian Press Association, Room 503 Lumsden Building. Enquiry involves no obligation on your part—so write, if interested.

MR WILLARD D STRAIGHT, MR BARTON OF BRITISH LEGATION AND DR. G. E. MORRISON

These photographs, the first to arrive in this country, portray incidents during the mutiny of Chinese soldiers in Pekin. Two thousand or more mutinous troops took part in the looting and burning of a large portion of the Tartar City, and those natives who offered even the slightest resistance were beheaded on the spot. Among the refugees at the American Legation at the time of the revolt were Mr. Willard D. Straight, representative of the New York financial syndicate, and his wife, who was Miss Dorothy Whitney, daughter of the late William C. Whitney. The soldiers did not attempt to interfere with them, but there was great danger from flying bullets and firebrands, which were flourished in all directions. Mr. and Mrs. Straight saved their records and valuables, but deserted a richly furnished house, which was given over to the looters. The photograph above shows them as they were fleeing from their home. The American marines performed heroic work during the uprising in protecting foreigners, and they are herewith shown "on the job." Mr. Calhoun, the American Minister, with a party of friends, remained in the Legation Quarter during the trouble, and to him should be given credit for saving the lives of many Americans and foreigners. He is shown in a group herewith. In the centre of the panel is the latest photograph of Yuan Shih-kai, China's first President. This picture was taken since he became the head of the republic.

Just now enthusiasm over the republic runs high. On every shop and every house in Pekin the five color flag that stands for the new order is flying. Not very many persons know what it signifies; they have been ordered by the police to fly the flag, and that is enough for them. But Young China knows.

LARGEST VESSEL AFLOAT, SINKING

Titanic on Her Maiden Trip Strikes Iceberg--Allan Liner Virginian, Answers Wireless Call for Aid and is With The Titanic, Which Has Large Passenger List.

Special to The Review.

Montreal, April 15— A wireless message from the Allan Liner, "Virginian' says that at eight thirty this morning the White Star Liner, "Titanic" was still afloat and slowly crawling in the general direction of Halifax from which is six hundred miles distant. The women and children have been placed in life boats ready for lowering at a moment's notice. The weather is clear and calm. The "Titanic's" head is down several feet, but the watertight compartments are holding and the pumps are being worked to utmost. Her forward holds are full of water.

ALL PASSENGERS ARE SAFE

Special 3 p.m.

New York, N.Y., April 15.—A wireless despatch from Captain Haddock, of the White Star liner Olympic, says twenty boat loads of passengers have been taken from the Titanic by the Cunard Liner Carpathia, and that others were transferred to the Parisian of the Allan Line. The Carpathia and Parisian are reported standing by the Titanic and the steamer Baltic is close to the scene. This information came direct to the local offices of the White Star Line. A second despatch states the Virginian has passed a line to the Titanic and will tow her to Halifax. All morning conflicting reports from many sources have poured in, but it is now apparent all on board are safe.

Montreal, April 15.—The Allan line office here last night received a wireless message from the captain of the company's steamship Virginian stating that he had been in wireless communication with the White Star liner Titanic, which had been in collision with an iceberg and requested assistance. The Virginian's captain reported that he was on his way to the Titanic.

The Virginian sailed from Halifax yesterday morning, and at the time the wireless message was sent, she is reckoned to have been about abeam of Cape Race. She has 900 passengers on board, but can accommodate 800 more of the Titanic's passengers. As she is not far from Halifax the remainder will not have to endure any great amount of discomfort.

The message from the Virginian's captain was sent by wireless to Cape Race, and thence by cable to Halifax, and then by wire to Montreal. The Allan line officials here expect to hear further news at any moment.

The White Star liner Titanic, the largest vessel afloat, left Southampton April 10 on her maiden voyage for New York. She is a vessel of 46,308 tons, is 882 feet 6 inches long and displaces 66,000 tons.

The Titanic when she left Southampton had about 1,300 passengers on board, of whom 350 were in the first cabin. Among these latter are F. D. Millet, the artist and president of the Consolidated American Academy at Rome; Major Archibald Butt, military aide to President Taft; C. M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Railway; J. Bruce Ismay, chairman and managing director of the White Star Line; Henry B. Harris, the American theatrical manager; W. T. Stead; Mrs. Isador Straus; Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor; Mr. and Mrs. George D. Widener; Benjamin Guggenheim, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Widener.

ROBLIN'S MOVE POPULAR ONE

Montreal, April 15.—Armand Lavergne, M.P.P. for Montmagny, stating that his reception, as well as that accorded to the other members of the Quebec contingent, is that sufficient evidence that a good feeling exists in that country towards Quebec. Mr. Lavergne says he is convinced that the Government's application of the new amendments will be done in a very sympathetic manner. "I have," he added, "every reason to believe that a great step has been taken in the way of a greatly improved state of affairs.

"What does Mgr. Langevin say about it?"

"I saw his grace and he is satisfied that a great advance has been taken, and that the demonstration was one of great good-will towards the Province of Quebec."

Mr. Lavergne states that the Quebec district will elect 18 members out of 23 to oppose the Gouin administration, and that this means a certain defeat for the present Ministry.

TURKEY IS APPROACHED

Terms of Peace Will Be Presented By the Powers To-morrow.

Rome, April 15.—For a month past the powers have been trying to reach an agreement among themselves as to how Turkey could be best approached with reference to a settlement of the war with Italy. The powers had already asked Italy on what conditions she would be ready to make peace. The Italian conditions did not prove acceptable to Turkey, to which Government they were communicated unofficially. It became evident to the powers that an official presentation of these conditions to Turkey would be a waste of time. They therefore decided to adopt a new course and ask Turkey on what conditions she would be ready to discuss a cessation of hostilities.

No Mediation In Tripoli Yet.

Constantinople, April 15—The statement emanating from St. Petersburg that the powers had made proposals of mediation to Constantinople, with a view to bringing to an end the war between Turkey and Italy, is incorrect. Although all the ambassadors here have received the text of an identical note to be submitted to the Porte, none as yet has been submitted. It is stated that the ambassadors will take the projected steps separately on April 16.

ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING OF CHILD

Toronto, April 15.—While playing with a loaded revolver about eight o'clock last night, Annie Taylor, aged 14 years, of 43 Simcoe street, shot herself and now lies in St. Michael's Hospital in a dying condition. The bullet entered her breast just above the heart, and her chances of recovery are very slight.

The girl lived with her sister, Mrs. Arthur Osborne, who keeps a rooming house at 43 Simcoe street. The Osbornes were packing their household goods preparatory to having them removed to Mr. Osborne's pressing and cleaning shop at 161 York street to-day. While lifting some wearing apparel from a drawer, Annie Taylor found a revolver. It is said that she pulled the trigger a couple of times, but there was no response. Then she began examining it, and in doing so pulled the trigger again. This time the trigger hit a loaded shell. The girl sank to the floor.

She was immediately removed in the police ambulance to the hospital. At an early hour this morning she was reported as being in a precarious condition.

ROOSEVELT HAS SWEEPING VICTORY IN PENNSYLVANIA

Politicians Are Amazed at Result of Primaries In Important State and Later Returns May Show That He Took Fifty-Three Out of Sixty-Four Delegates—Woodrow Wilson Has a Walk-Over.

Philadelphia, April 15.—Col. Roosevelt's sweeping victory in Pennsylvania at Saturday's primary election kept growing as the returns continued to come in. Incomplete returns yesterday gave the former President 65 of the state's 76 delegates in the Republican national convention. The Roosevelt supporters are claiming 67, and later returns may carry the figures to that total. Col. Roosevelt won 53 of the 64 district national delegates, and his followers elected enough delegates to the state convention to give them control of that body. The state convention will name 112 delegates at large.

Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey, who had no organized opposition, will have 74 of the 76 delegates from Pennsylvania in the Democratic national convention. In the eleventh congressional district the two Democratic national delegates elected are favorable to Governor Judson Harmon, but they are not pledged.

Politicians look upon the triumph of Col. Roosevelt with astonishment. The supporters of the former President were without a state organization or without an organization in many of the 32 congressional districts.

The regular Republican organization, headed by U. S. Senator Boise Penrose, which has withstood the fury of many a political storm, received a crushing defeat in the loss of control of the state convention. It is the first time in the present generation that it has lost control of that body.

The significance of the Roosevelt victory can be realized when it is remembered that the delegates in control of the state convention have the power to select the state chairman and, under the party rules, the delegation to the national convention elects the national committeeman. At present Senator Penrose holds both positions.

It was said by a prominent member of the state committee last night that some the Roosevelt delegates elected to the state convention are regular organization men, who, while voting for Roosevelt delegates, will stand by the state organization otherwise.

Some of the leaders of the Republican organization refrained from personally entering the primary as candidates for district national delegates, as it had been expected they would be selected as delegates at large. Among those understood to have been looked upon as the likely delegates were Senators Penrose and Oliver, Governor Tener, Secretary of State Robert McAfee, and State Senator James P. McNichol; the leader of the party organization in Philadelphia.

The vote polled was light. In some districts it did not go much over 50 per cent. of the total vote cast at the last general election. Col. Roosevelt received his heaviest vote from the reform element of the state, represented by the Keystone party, which since it was organized about two years ago, has opposed the regular Republicans at every election and succeeded in electing a reform mayor in Philadelphia last year.

Another element of strength of the Roosevelt forces was the body of 170,000 idle anthracite miners in the northeastern counties of the state, where the former President ran strong.

DISAPPEARANCE OF FARMER

Belleville, April 15.—The disppearance of Wm. Holland, a prominent farmer of Faraday Township, Hastings County, is causing uneasiness.

On Thursday last he went to Bancroft village to draw money as secretary-treasurer of a school section in Dungannon Township, which adjoins Faraday Township, for the purpose of paying the teacher, Miss George. He did not pay the teacher but made out a check for $50 and afterwards deposited $10. This was the last seen of him.

It is feared he has been drowned in Otter Lake, over which he may have traveled to reach his home. Holland is a married man and has four children.

Black Was Acquitted.

Toronto, April 15.—Robert Black, the mining broker with offices at Haileybury and Toronto, who was charged with misappropriating funds, has been acquitted by the judge. No evidence whatever was submitted and the judge dismissed the case.

FRENCH IN FIRST FORM; SIR JAMES' ANNOUNCEMENT ON SCHOOL QUESTION

English Is to Be the Language In All But the First Two Years of Primary Schools—Additional Inspection Will Be Provided to Secure Adequate Supervision—No Unauthorized Text-Books to Be Used.

Toronto, April 15.—The appointment of additional inspectors and of supervising inspectors to test the progress made and enforce the carrying out of the regulations.

Also, where necessary, to give not only additional financial aid, but to make state aid conditional upon the employment of teachers capable of giving instruction in English.

Thus did the Prime Minister at the closing session of the Legislature on Saturday morning declare the Government's intentions to deal with the English-French schools of the province, in view of Dr. Merchant's report.

The Premier on rising stated that the attitude of the Government remained the same as that outlined last session, which was then expressed in the following resolution, passed unanimously.

That the English language shall be the language of instruction and of all communications with the pupils in the public and separate schools of the province, except where, in the opinion of the department, it is impracticable by reason of pupils not understanding English.

"Let me say that this is the present position of the Government and I mean to stand by it," declared the Premier.

"Before the close of last session we announced that when Dr. Merchant's report came, if we found that any of the alleged abuses have occurred, this Government pledges itself to abolish any such abuses if they are found. That was our attitude then and it is our attitude now."

Sir James announced that, having ascertained the present conditions from the commissioner's report, the Government proposed to take the course which he had indicated.

"There is nothing else for us to do, but to carry out the pledges we made last session," continued Sir James. "That is why there is no more legislation necessary on the part of the Government."

D. Racine, French-Canadian member for Russell, asked how long a child would attend school before the use of French as a means of instruction would be discontinued.

"Two years only will be required to learn the English language," answered Sir James.

"Do you mean by that that the English language will be used exclusively at the end of that period?" asked Mr. Racine.

"No, I did not say English alone," was the reply, "but by that the studies would be undertaken by means of the English language alone."

The leader of the Opposition, replying to Sir James, declared that the report of Dr. Merchant showed a serious condition, and that the English-French schools are, as a whole, lacking in efficiency.

"We all agree that the present condition should not be allowed to continue," he said.

"No child in Canada, whether English or French, is properly equipped unless he has a good working knowledge of the English language."

"Nothing short of that is fair," continued Mr. Rowell. "Till the Government takes action to guarantee a sufficient supply of competent teachers it has not done its duty."

"That is just one of the things we propose to do," the Premier inter-

FRANCE FOR ARMED PEACE

Cannes, April 15.—France's attitude in regard to future world politics was outlined by Premier Poincare in the course of an eloquent tribute which he paid at the dedication of the statue of King Edward VII., which was unveiled here yesterday.

The French Premier lauded King Edward as the maker of the triple understanding between Great Britain, France and Russia, saying that he was a laborer for the world's peace and civilization and for the progress of humanity. Speaking as to the future, M. Poincare declared that France would steadfastly adhere to the policy of peace, which King Edward had laid down in the understanding between the three countries. He continued:

"France will neither attack or provoke, but in order to be assured that she herself will be neither attacked nor provoked, she must have land and sea forces capable of commanding respect for her honor and insuring the defence of her interests. It is by own own resources of men and money, and by our naval and military power that we will primarily safeguard our rights and dignity."

This sense of security, he concluded, would be fortified by the sympathy and support of France's friends and allies.

HENRI BRISSON PASSES AWAY

Paris, April 15.—Henri Brisson, president of the Chamber of Deputies, died yesterday. He was born at Bourges, July 31, 1835.

Henri Brisson was on several occasions defeated in the election for the Presidency of the republic. In 1894 he stood second in the poll, receiving 195 votes to M. Casimir's 451. He was first elected as representative of the Seine in the assembly in 1871, having been prior to that deputy mayor of Paris. At the general elections in February, 1876, he was elected for the Tenth Arrondissement of Paris to the new chamber. He was elected vice-president three years later and was named president of the budget commission. He succeeded M. Gambetta as president of the chamber in 1881, and accepted the office of Premier on the fall of the Ferry Cabinet in 1885, but after a few months gave place to M. De Freycinet.

In the elections of 1889 he was the only Republican candidate elected in Paris on the first ballot. For many years his Republicanism was of a Spartan nature. He lived in a bare flat that the Iron Duke would have admired. He was never known to take a cab, always riding on the outside of omnibusses. He was the living embodiment in France of what has been called the Nonconformist conscience. His special mission was to preside over commissions of enquiry, especially when scandals were to be investigated with inflexible severity.

M. Brisson was re-elected president of the Chamber of Deputies in 1906 and held that office ever since. He was mentioned as a possible candidate to succeed M. Fallieres as President of the republic in 1913.

A mutiny of 1,030 unpaid Chinese troops at Shanghai was quelled by Cantonese regiments.

Gas Distended His Stomach

Caused Palpitation, and Prevented Sleep—When Health Was Gone, Cure Followed Use of "Nerviline."

"My last wish will be," writes Harry P. Pollard, a well-known boot and shoe traveler of Hartford, "that everyone with a bad stomach may learn as I did, before it's too late, that Nerviline is the one remedy to cure. Why, I was in mighty bad shape, my digestion was all wrong, and every night I would waken with a start and find my heart jumping like a threshing machine. This was caused by gas on my stomach pressing against my heart. When I started to use Nerviline I got better mighty fast. It is certainly a grand remedy for the traveling man, keeps your stomach in order, cures cramps, prevents lumbago or rheumatism, breaks up chest colds and sore throat—in fact there hasn't been an ache or pain inside or outside for the past two years that I haven't cured with Nerviline. Do you wonder I recommend it?"

BILINGUAL SCHOOLS

The announcement in the Legislature on Saturday by Premier Whitney of the government's intentions in the bi-lingual school matter is very important. It demonstrates what the Conservatives of the province said during the provincial campaign, and since, in fact, the bi-lingual agitation began: That the Whitney Government could be depended on to take whatever remedial steps were necessary. The changes Premier Whitney announced the government would make are briefly as follows:

1. A supervising inspector will be appointed whose duties will be to visit every school, watch the progress of their work, and enforce the regulations.

2. State aid will be given only to those schools the teachers of which are able to teach English. If necessary these schools will get financial assistance toward the payment of the teachers' salary.

3. Only such text books as are authorized by the department may be used.

4. Instruction in English must commence as soon as the child enters the school, and in no case may instruction in French be continued after the child leaves the First Form.

The drastic regulation of bi-lingual schools these proposals contemplate are not fully apparent at first sight. Instruction in English must commence as soon as children enter school, and in no case may instruction in the French language be continued after the first form. This does not necessarily mean that French shall not be used in communication, but all instruction must be in the English language. The thoroughness of such a regulation leaves little to be desired. The government proposes to enforce the provision by appointing supervising inspectors to visit and watch all bi-lingual schools, and provincial grants will be given only to those schools which have teachers able to instruct in English. If necessary financial aid will be given the schools to get teachers competent to instruct in English, so that there will be no excuse for failure.

There will be most complete gratification at the action of the government in the school matter. It justifies the hope and the pride of the Conservatives in Sir James Whitney. Even the Liberals organs commenting on the proposal say that nothing more to ensure that Ontario scholars shall get a thorough Anglicised education could have been advanced. Their criticism is confined to asking where all the teachers are to come from? When the Liberals sought to make political capital out of the bi-lingual matter, at election time, they failed to ask where were the teachers; what were the practical difficulties of ensuring in English education for every school child. Now that the government has gone farther to put its promises into effect than the Liberals dared go, they weakly fell back on the query, Where will the teachers come from? The Whitney Government may be depended on to see that the teachers are forthcoming. A supply of competent teachers is absolutely necessary for the carrying out of the reforms. If bi-lingual teachers are required in the French school sections, under the new regulations, the school boards will have to raise the extra money for the sake of their racial pride.

When Dr. Merchant was appointed to investigate the question, the government announced that it would await his report, and then take what action was necessary to remedy defects, if any were found. Dr. Merchant's report drew attention to the existence of schools where only French was used as an instructional medium. So the government promptly formulated its new policy. Then Rowell following in the Legislature was left practically speechless at the boldness of the government in grasping the nettle. During the campaign Mr. Rowell dodged the question on every platform. All he could say was that he was in favor of an English education for every child, but he would not go into details to hear how he would secure such an end. The province at large will hail the strong and vigorous stand of the government as one of the outstanding features of all its good legislation. The Seven Sleepers were awake, while the Rowellites slumbered.

HOME WORK FOR PUPILS

Mr. James L. Hughes, the veteran school inspector of Toronto, is credited with pointing out fifty-seven different varieties of ways in which a school pupil may earn money in after school hours. These ways cover all forms of moderate effort from cutting grass to cleaning knives and typewriting, and spinning aluminium, whatever that means. The serenity with which Mr. Hughes prescribes these various forms of industry is amusing in the light of what the regulations of the school prescribe for the pupil in home work. Home work is the bane of school life, for most children. Why the child cannot be taught during school hours, without being harrassed and burdened with home work is one of these things no fellow can understand. The boy in the drug store, the machine shop, the insurance office, is not given home work to do, and his learning of his trade or profession is equally as pertinent a matter as his attention to school studies.

If the hours out of school are to be given to chores and such occupations, why insist that the boy or girl shall take on the burden of home work. To appreciate the irony of Mr. Hughes' advice one has only to read the rules for home work as laid down in our schools in Peterborough. "Home work is prescribed in every form, for every pupil. Pupils who say they have no home work are guilty of misrepresentation. Parents are reminded that in the matter of home work they must both cooperate with the teachers and share the responsibilities. No engagement should be allowed to interfere with the preparation of home work."

There is something wrong with the system that inculcates such stringent attention to home work and leaves it open for Mr. Hughes to put out advice directly opposite. Possibly the wrong is with Mr. Hughes.

Teachers admit the depressing effect of home tasks on their pupils. These tasks are a source of deepest aversion and create a feeling of dislike for school and for study in study hours. The claim—and it is seriously put forward—that the pupil is less attentive during school hours than he might be, because he thinks he can make it up in some indefined way by extra study, merely shows that the teacher is unable to gain the attention of his pupils in study hours.

The whole thing is radically wrong. If our school system and teachers cannot teach when and where teaching should be done, why not frankly admit it and let us try and find a remedy. Home work is fully as objectionable as Home Rule.

NOTE AND COMMENT

The Methodist church choir of Cobourg appeared last Sunday in surplices. This was decided on some time ago. The surplices may be all right, says the World, but a high bar in front, back of the pulpit, hides all the effect of the innovation. What the people should do is abolish the bar.

The first sensible suggestion that has emanated fro mthe suffragette camp has been handed out. Mrs. Despard—she is well named—propels forward an appeal to all women to go without Easter hats, and to turn the large sums of money so saved into the funds of the cause. Hurrah! All men will subscribe, for if the women don't get the hats, they'll never see the money. Now for an era of home-made hats.

From the many advertisements appearing in the papers extolling the virtues of vacuum cleaners, it is inferred that the home-cleaning season is at hand. Many a woman is contriving to get hold of some useless pumping device, that promises—at a cost of $2.50 to do what her mother knew and knows can only be accomplished by real bodily wearing work of the most laborious kind. The only way to clean house is to clean it. All else is a delusion and snare.

A curious case has arisen in Belleville over an arbitration in connection with the right-of-way of the C. N. R. The line cut through a nursery, the survey being made in 1909. The owner feeling that if the line was to be built as laid out, there was no use carrying on the work of the nursery neglected it. A low assessment resulted. Now the railway want to settle on the basis of the low assessment an dthe owner claims extensive damages and big remuneration for loss of business.

SUFFERED FROM VIOLENT CATHARTICS

The Warning of Mr. Geo. C. Fox Is One That Should Be Heeded by All.

Few men on the road are better known than genial George Fox, whose friends throughout the West are legion. In the following letter he expresses gratitude for signal services rendered by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. He goes on to say: "Until I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills and experienced their wonderful mildness and curative power, I estimated the value of every pill by its activity. Talking about this to a well-known physician I met on the train the other day, he explained there are different kinds of drugs that act upon the bowels, the most active being known as drastic. Except in extreme cases where the life of the patient depends upon speedy evacuation of the bowels, pills should never be drastic. Purgatives cause catarrh of the bowels and inflammation; their dose must be increased, causing even more harm. With such a clear explanation I could see why Dr. Hamilton's Pills are curative and not irritating, why they are mild, yet most searching.

"From my experience I recommend everyone that takes pills to give up the old-fashioned harsh, purging pill, and, instead, to use Dr. Hamilton's. They cure headache, biliousness, constipation, bad stomach, and keep the system in perfect condition."

Baby Was Smothered.

Hamilton, April 15.—Accidentally smothered to death by its mother, the five-weeks-old infant of Martha Brodicka was found dead in bed beside her Saturday morning. The mother, who is prostrated with grief, states that she put the baby to bed at eight o'clock and woke up several times during the night to feed it, but that when she woke up yesterday morning it was dead. The little body was taken to the morgue, but Dr. Carry stated that no inquest will be held, as all the evidence points to accidental death.

From Paris to London.

London, April 15.—Maurice Prevost flew from Paris to Eastchurch Saturday, 250 miles, in six hours, carrying a passenger. At Eastchurch, 42 miles from London, are the Royal Aero Club's flying grounds. The passenger was Lawrence Santoni.

The crossing of the English Channel occupied 25 minutes, and the whole flight was made at an altitude of over 2,000 feet.

Wearing the Kohinoor.

The great Kohinoor diamond was worn at the Delhi durbar by the Queen and not by the King, and so we have one more triumph of what people call superstition. It was originally intended that the King should wear the jewel, but a research into the depths of Indian public opinion disclosed the fact that the Kohinoor was expected to bring good fortune to a woman, but bad fortune to a man. Some of the great Indian princes thought the matter so serious that they remonstrated against any act that would arouse in the public mind an expectation of bad luck, and what greater bad luck can there be than the expectation of it? So the King had to be content with the common cheap gems of the ordinary regalia, while his consort wore the cream of the lot.

Lady Betty Across the Water

By C. N. & A. M. WILLIAMSON

Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

The rest happened so quickly it was all in a jumble. With a smile, Mr. Brett reached out and took my sunshade, which I'd closed. Just as the bull came at us he opened it in the creature's face. The bull swerved a few inches, surprised, and the next thing I knew the sunshade was tossed away. Mr. Brett had seized the animal by his horns and was vaulting on his back with a laugh. "Run to the nearest fence," said he.

He did it as easily as if it were play, and so it seemed to be for him. The bull tore about, ramping and raving, while I obediently flew for the fence and scrambled over without ceremony. There I turned, panting, frightened, yet laughing in spite of myself. Mr. Brett's hat had fallen off, and his short hair was ruffled across his forehead. Riding the black and white bull, hanging on by legs as well as arms, he looked like a runaway schoolboy reveling in a mischievous lark. His eyes sparkled, and his white teeth shone.

The bull was sure he could throw his rider at first, but finding he couldn't was very much surprised. His wild gallop subsided to a trot, and, embracing his great neck, Mr. Brett bent far down to one side to snatch up my sunshade, which lay on the grass, open and undamaged. A few moments later he had steered the bull in some curious way with his feet, so that the beast came loping stupidly near the fence. Then Mr. Brett jumped off and vaulted over.

"That was a good bit of sport," said he. "It reminds me of old times, when we chaps used to ride steers for a wager. I'm a little out of practice now, but I hope you were amused."

"I was much too terrified," I said, thankful that he was on the right side of the fence at last.

"Then I apologize for the exhibition. The silly brute didn't know he was our bull, you see, but I reckon he'll remember now and act accordingly."

After that nothing else happened to upset us on the way to Sally.

The place where she is staying isn't a farm, but quite a small cottage in a lovely garden, walled in with oaks and maples, and Mrs. Randal sells seeds and cuttings.

A young girl came down to the door when we rang, and asked us to "please sit down on the piazza;" she would call Miss Woodburn. Then we had a few minutes to wait, and Sally appeared.

I was glad to see her! And when she held me tight and kissed me I had to wink back some silly tears. It was so good to feel that she cared about me, and would sympathize in everything, for I knew she would.

After Mr. Brett had said "how do you do," and a few polite words, he added that he would just stroll over to the Green Dairy farm across the way. He knew the farmer there, and would like to have a chat with him. We settled that he was to come back for me in an hour, and then Sally and I were left alone together.

She made me begin at the beginning and tell all my adventures, cause as well as effect, before she would give me any of her news, or even her opinions on the situation as far as it concerned me.

It made quite a long story, and Sally was a beautiful listener, as only sympathetic and unselfish people can be.

"There wasn't anything else for me to do, was there?" I asked when she knew everything exactly as it had happened.

He looked like a runaway schoolboy.

She complimented me on my "pluck," like the dear creature she is, and said she hadn't it in her heart to be sorry, as things had turned out, that I had had such a chase to find her.

"To tell the truth, it was your affairs that drove me to Chicago," she went on. "I don't mind your knowing now, dear. We can talk freely about things I couldn't discuss with you before. Of course, I always knew Katherine wanted you for Potter, and that they'd both do anything to get you. It began with her trying to keep other men away from you even on the ship. Do you remember? Nobody could get near you but Tom Doremus, and he wouldn't if Kath hadn't been afraid of Mrs. Van der Windt. It was just the same in Newport, whenever she could fix it so. I couldn't exactly warn you; it wouldn't have been nice. They are my cousins, and I was Kath's guest—though I shouldn't have been for long, if I hadn't wanted to watch over you. But you know I did drop hints sometimes, didn't I? It wasn't my business if you'd fallen in love with Potter, but though he isn't a bad fellow, he's not good enough or strong enough for you, Betty, and I should have been mighty sick at heart if he had got you."

"I never felt he wanted me, really," I said, "although he was always proposing."

"Oh, yes, he did want you. Perhaps he wasn't truly in love at first, though he always admired you, deah. There was an actress that he was crazy about last winter—a nice girl, too, and he would have married her if it hadn't been for Katherine, who was wild over it, said such a misalliance in the family would ruin her as well as him, and contrived to break it off somehow. Potter never cared for any one else so much. The girl seemed to understand his temper exactly, and though he was heart and soul for winning you, after the race was begun, I shouldn't wonder a bit—now he's lost you—if that affair didn't come on again some day. He might do worse."

"I wish the girl joy of him," said I. "But how was it you went away from Newport?"

"Oh, I told Kath what I thought of her for trying to trap you. It was that and nothing else. And she didn't like it. She almost asked me to go, and though I knew it was to get me out of the way, I had to do it."

"Mr. Brett has been a saint to me," said I.

Sally smiled her three-cornered smile. "I think from what you tell me of some of the things you've said to him, and some of the things which have happened, that he has been a saint—more of a saint than you know."

"You mean I've tried his temper?" I asked anxiously.

"Not exactly his temper. But never mind."

Going home Mr. Brett and I walked along the road until we'd passed the cow meadow. Then we took to the short cuts again. A lovely blue darkness was just touched with the faint radiance of a new moon, as if the lid of a box had snapped shut on the sun, and the moment the light was gone the fields lit up with thousands and thousands of tiny, pulsing, flitting sparks.

"What is it?" I asked, astonished.

"Fireflies," said he. "Did you never see any before?"

"Never. How wonderful. They are the most exquisite, magical little things!"

"Then I'm glad you're seeing them for the first time with me," he said.

When we got home the stars were pricking out in the sky, and Patty and Ide were down by the gate, counting them. It seems if you can count seven stars for seven nights, then the first man who touches your hand afterward you're bound to marry. I counted my first seven, and I do hope it won't rain for a week.

Chapter 18

THE day after I came to Valley farm was one of the longest days of my life. Not that it wasn't pleasant, for it was. But when you get up before 6 and finish breakfast at 7 it does give you a good many hours to do what you like with.

I wasn't allowed to help Mrs. Trowbridge and the girls with their work. Mr. Brett went off directly after breakfast with Mr. Trowbridge and the two mysterious young men to get in hay or do something useful and farmy, so I sat in the maple grove with Vivace (who is a great favorite in the household) and wrote down all my experiences since Chicago. We had an enormous dinner at 12, which made me feel very odd, as I'm not used to it. But when we were called to "tea" I knew better than I did yesterday what to expect.

"Beware Hatpins!"

One hundred thousand placards bearing the words "Beware Hatpins!" have been distributed broadcast in Montreal. This is the first step in a movement to abolish the modern danger. The placards were posted on fences, telegraph poles, street cars, and everywhere it was possible to stick one.

Lady Duff Gordon says that the Parisienne is losing all her taste and style and that English women dress very much better. She says that a man in Paris has invented a sort of funnel affair that is on the order of the crinoline, and there is no telling to what extremes Paris women may go before the end of the present winter. English women are said to disdain the idea of crinoline, but no doubt its appearance in Paris would soon be followed by its adoption by both English and American women.

Important Advice To SPECTACLE WEARERS

Three Plain Facts

1 That more eyes are injured by the injurious use of Glasses than by any other known cause.

2 That a great number of people are wearing spectacles unsuitable for them, and for which their eyes have not been tested.

3 That the old fashioned and unscientific method of testing the eyes by trying on various spectacles of different strengths until the sight is apparently suited, is to say the least of it, dangerous.

It cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of those who suffer from defective eye-sight that proper lenses and correctly fitting frames are absolutely essential for comfortable spectacle wearing. We grind our own lenses.

$50 FINE IN LIQUOR CASE

Two serious cases were tried before county magistrate F. D. Moore K.C., at Bobcaygeon, Friday. The first case was one in which a farmer named Kettle pleaded guilty of having liquor for sale, the district being under local option. It appears that a few days ago License Inspector Eingow seized a quantity of wet goods at the C. P. R. depot, Bobcaygeon. They were labeled to the above gentleman and billed from the Peterboro Cigar Company, Peterboro. On opening the cases the inspector discovered a 4 gallon cask, 24 quarts of port wine and 12 flasks. It was pointed out that there was no such company as the Peterboro Cigar Company. The accused, who pleaded guilty, was fined $50 and costs, while the liquor, which is valued at $75 was confiscated. Mr. L. E. Weldon, Lindsay, appeared for the prosecution while Mr. L. V. O'Connor, Lindsay, appeared for the defence.

ABDUCTION CASE

The other case was one in which a young man, 20 years of age, was accused of abducting a young girl under 16 years of age. It appears that the girl's parents have been absent from the village for some time and that she was induced to go with the young man to the home of his sister-in-law, where she remained for two days, when relatives of the girl demanded that she return home. The young man denied that she was on the premises, and as a consequence the relatives had a warrant sworn out and the young girl was removed. In the court before Magistrate Moore Barrister Weldon appeared for the prosecution, while Barrister O'Connor represented the defence. His worship decided that the young man must either marry the unfortunate girl or serve a lengthy term in prison.

SAID FAREWELL TO MR. J. W. CORNISH

Has Been Superintendent at the George St. Sunday School

Yesterday afternoon the George street Methodist Sunday school said farewell to their superintendent, Mr. J. W. Cornish, who left this morning for Toronto.

The Rev. Mr. Couch on behalf of the school expressed his appreciation of the good work he had undertaken in the Sunday school with so much zeal and success, and said that while the George street Sunday school was losing a splendid superintendent, some other school in Toronto would gain an enthusiastic and experienced worker.

Mr. Cornish made a brief reply and farewell speech, thanking the school for their energetic support and co-operation, and feeling sure that his successor would be extended the same help.

Mr. Cornish came from Lakefield, where he was engaged in the milling business, about a year ago, to take the position of manager of the Campbell Flour Mills here, and for some time past has been the popular superintendent of the George street Sunday school. He left for Toronto this morning to accept a lucrative situation there.

Although Mr. Cornish's removal will mean promotion for him, his many local friends will be sorry to sever their connections with him.

STAGE MEMORIES.

When Miss M. E. Braddon Appeared as an Actress.

To the present generation of playgoers, perhaps the name of Mrs. Charles Calvert is not so very familiar. Years ago, however, the appearance of this talented lady, one of the cleverest and most finished actresses of the day, was hailed with delight, particularly in the provinces, where she and her husband, the late Charles Calvert, did so much to elevate dramatic art. Even as late as last year, however, Mrs. Calvert, in spite of her seventy-four years, was associated with Sir Herbert Tree's magnificent production of "Henry VIII.," while many will probably remember her delightful portrayal of the amorous widow in "Beauty and the Barge" six years ago at the Haymarket.

Mrs. Calvert made her debut when she was a tiny tot of six, and she tells some fascinating stories of stage life in her Reminiscences — "Sixty-Eight Years on the Stage." One of her fellow-players in the old touring days was Miss Braddon, who began life as an actress, and was known on the stage as Miss Mary Seyton, and she draws an interesting picture of their life together at Southampton, where they first met.

"Those were happy times for us two girls," she says. "We each had our first sweetheart. Mine was the 'leading gentleman,' whilst Mary accepted little attentions from Mr. Brandon, and as an instance of her cleverness, when I said one day:

"'Well, Mary, I wouldn't be seen with a Brand on,' she retorted, 'Well, your taste I call "vert".'"

Some years afterwards Mrs. Calvert met Miss Braddon again at Brighton. She was still playing "walking ladies," and it was evident had made very little progress in her profession. As a matter of fact, Miss Braddon's thoughts were far from acting. She was writing a novel, and Mrs. Calvert remembers one night when half Miss Braddon's speeches in a certain Shakespearean scene were impromptu (though somehow she always managed to alight on the last two or three words correctly). Mrs. Calvert remonstrated:

"Oh, Mary, how you can go on for an important Shakespearean part, knowing as little as you do, I can't imagine!" Miss Braddon merely laughed and said: "My dear, I gave you all your cues!" "Which she certainly had," remarks Mrs. Calvert, "but she had arrived at them by a route which was far from Shakespearean."

And then there is this little homely story, which illustrates Miss Braddon's kindness of heart. "Towards the end of the season," says Mrs. Calvert, "I was again compelled to absent myself—and about the time of 's close my third little son, Louis, arrived. Knowing that my landlady was no adept in the culinary art, kind-hearted Mary often stepped across with something covered over in a breakfast cup, and the remark:—

"'Mamma has been making some good soup, and I feel sure you would like a little,' or, 'Mamma has stewed some sweetbreads for our supper, and we think a little will do you good.'"

FINE RECORD OF HOLSTEIN HEIFER

World's Dairy Record Established for Canada it is Said

Brockville, April 15—A registered Holstein heifer, 4 years old, owned by William C. Stevens, Phillipsville Leeds county, has completed a seven-day record of 472.72lbs. of milk, 30,857 lbs of fat; 38.57 lbs of butter.

The average per cent. of fat was 6.6. This is said to be the largest record ever made by any cow of any age or breed, being the first time the world's dairy record has been held in Canada.

WAGON AND STREET CAR IN COLLISION

The thick, heavy fog which hung like a pall upon the city early this morning, was in a measure responsible for an accident, the victim of which was Mr. W. Gray, Mark street, East City, a helper on the delivery wagon of the Campbell Flour Mills Company.

About 7.30 the delivery wagon, in charge of the driver, and his helper, was proceeding north on George street. Half way between Dalhousie and Sherbrooke streets, they met a George street car. The truck driver endeavored to turn off to one side of the road, as much as possible, but the speed of the horses and wagon was retarded, as far as could be learned, by the piles of dirt, collected by the city and left on either side of the roadway. Before the driver could evade the car, it had struck his wagon on one corner, damaging the truck badly, and throwing the helper, Mr. Gray, on to the ground, clear of the car track, fortunately.

From information supplied, it appears that there was insufficient space to allow the wagon to pass safely between the piles of dirt and the street car track.

The injured man was driven to Dr. Browns' office, where he was found to be suffering from shock, with bruises and cuts on the back of the head. No serious results, however, were anticipated by the physician.

PAST LEADERS' BADGES PRESENTED

At the regular meeting of the Peterborough No. 193 O.C.H.C., held on Friday night, there was a very large attendance. The meeting was held, as is customary, in the K. of P. hall, Simcoe street.

A number of applications were dealt with and initiations carried out. An interesting part of the meeting was the presentation of a Past Leader's badge to Bro. G. W. Bartley, and Sister Mrs. R. Wright. The presentations were made by Past Leader Bro. W. Kemp.

Both recipients acknowledged in suitable terms their appreciation of the insignia conferred upon them. A report of the recent Supreme Circle meeting held in Toronto was given by the local representative present, Bro. G. W. Bartley.

GOVERNMENTS CHIEF ENGINEER IN THE CITY

Accompanied by Mr. W. A. Bowden, chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Mayor Bradburn and some of the city officials visited the Hunter street bridge to-day, to look over the locality with a view to constructing a high level bridge across the river. The engineer's visit was partly the result of Mr. J. H. Burnhams' request that the department have Mr. Bowden visit the city and look over the bridge situation. Mr. Bowden suggests a high level bridge being thrown across, to supersede the present unsatisfactory structure. He did not commit himself, however, as to what the Government might do, not being in a position to make any statement.

While in the city Mr. Bowden is visiting all the fixtures and locks on the Trent Valley Canal.

PUPILS BACK TO THEIR STUDIES

The Public Schools of the city and the Collegiate Institute re-opened this morning, after the Easter holidays. The attendance at the Public Schools is good, there being very few of the students of last term that are not already back in their accustomed places, ready for the final term's work. There are not many new students, but the good attendance of the old ones is gratifying to the teachers. The Collegiate Institute pupils too, nearly all resumed their studies again this morning.

Milady's Mirror

For Tired Nerves.

After a trying afternoon in the shops or at business take a hot lemonade with a dash of pineapple fruit sirup and you will be surprised at the revival of energy and general relaxation it affords. If the drink is taken at a soda fountain be careful not to get chilled when going out of doors. Hot lemonade opens the pores of the skin and causes one to be particularly sensitive to cold.

No complexion lotion has been found equal in beneficial results to lemon juice. The juice should be applied after the face is carefully bathed in hot water and a pure mild soap to remove all particles of dust and grime. If contact with the face causes a stinging sensation, as it is sure to do, it is merely tangible evidence that the lemon is doing its work.

The juice should be gently massaged into the face until dry and should be allowed to remain on overnight. In the morning bathe it off with warm water and the merest hint of soap and apply a greaseless cream and pure rice powder as a soothing influence and a protection from the cold.

Skin blemishes, such as pimples, blackheads, brown spots and freckles, yield quickly to this treatment, which eventually refines and bleaches as well as improves the texture.

As for the flesh reducing value of lemon, it lies in the well known fact that acid is the enemy of superfluous flesh. Discomfort caused by added pounds melts away before the fruit diet for the simple and sufficient reason that when the outward supply of flesh producing foods is cut off the system feeds upon its own fatty tissues, much to the relief and joy of the consumer and consumed.

So then, the season of candy and sweets being past, let the beauty seeker go in search of that homely little fruit—the lemon.

Don'ts For the Woman of Forty.

"When we are forty there isn't any reason why we should look it." So said a beauty lecturer recently in one of her "talks," and the following are some of her "don'ts" to the woman who would rejuvenate herself:

"Every time you lose your temper or grow whining or irritable you add to your age in appearance. Whenever you feel angered remember to relax your jaw, and the feeling will disappear.

"If you live in the past you are sure to look older than you are. Women who are continually referring to things they used to do are going backward and not forward. Can you imagine a chicken after being hatched longing to get back to its shell? The whole impetus of the world is forward.

"Then people who lack imagination are always tiresome, and that means they seem old.

"Never elevate your eyebrows when you talk and don't feel too sympathetic, hold hands and sway together as some women do when they are gushing over each other. A woman doesn't mean anything by that, and the next day if you needed her she wouldn't be on hand, for she would be swaying with some other woman.

"Change your style of dress and the way you do your hair and get out of any habit or rut you may have fallen into. Get a new dressmaker and milliner and decide to wear something different from anything you have had before. That will make you feel younger and give you a new interest in life. Habits are the signs of age.

"And remember that there is no such thing as age in charm and that the characteristics of the woman of sixty are quite as attractive as those of a young girl."

Recipe For Chapped Lips.

A favorite prescription among druggists is made as follows: Take lard, sixteen parts; cacao oil, twenty-four parts; spermaceti, eight parts; yellow wax, three parts; alcanna root, one part. Put these over a fire, preferably in a double boiler, and fuse them for fifteen minutes at a gentle heat, strain through a cloth and add one-fifteenth part of oil of bitter almonds and, if a pleasing odor is desired, one-sixth part each of oil of bergamot and oil of lemon.

Pure rendered mutton tallow is held by many to possess excellent healing qualities for chaps.

Tonic For White Hair.

Pour a half pint of boiling water over a tablespoonful of powdered castile soap. Add a pinch of borax, the beaten whites of two eggs and a teaspoonful of listerine.

Only lukewarm water should be used on white hair and no heat used in the drying process. Curling irons should never touch such hair, as the extreme heat will cause it to break and fall off, leaving it in a ragged, uneven condition. In rinsing white hair always use the coolest water possible, and to the last water add a little dissolved ultramarine blue.

A Beauty Tip.

If the circulation is defective try some simple hand exercises. Clapping them rhythmically, twisting the fingers with a different interlacing every time, shaking them loose from the wrists—all these will help to bring the blood to the farthest confines of the finger tips, and external care will do the rest.

The grand jury at Buffalo has indicted the Adams and American Express Co's for overcharging.

APOSTLE OF LABRADOR

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, known as the "Apostle of Labrador. He is now on his way back to Newfoundland and Labrador, the scene of his labors.

Dr. Grenfell is a medical man with profound religious convictions, and a decided turn for philanthropy. He accepted in 1890 the post of superintendent of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, sailed for Labrador in 1892, where he has grown to love the poor fisher folk upon whom he has lavished his skill and capacity for organization.

Under the black hills of that remote peninsula he has built mission hospitals, co-operative stores, an orphanage and founded various schemes for the benefit of the people. When the young surgeon first visited the coast he witnessed the terrible hardships suffered by the inhabitants in the absence of medical care of any kind. He saw people who had endured terrible agony for years, when their condition might have been easily improved and even restored to normal in the beginning with a little attention from a doctor. He went into sod huts where people who should have been strong and healthy and full of the joy of living in the most bracing climate in the world, lay dying miserably of tubercular affections. He saw about him everywhere the evidences of a complete ignorance of the simple rules of hygiene, and as a result an appalling amount of misery which could in large measure be prevented. And this young doctor realized that here was his life-work.

"I went away," said Dr. Grenfell, "but I knew I would come back. I felt that it would be a mockery for me to pray to Christ to have mercy upon this people and to save them, and yet to be unwilling myself to work for them. True Christianity consists in really helping your neighbor as the Master Himself would have done. And so I went back."

Thus it was that a young English surgeon entered upon the career which has earned him the undying love and gratitude of the people he has served, and the enthusiastic admiration of the whole English-speaking world. People nowadays are engrossed more than they ought to be perhaps in the acquisition of money and in the selfish activities of life. But they know a hero when they see one. And they have universally recognized a good and great man in this quiet-mannered doctor.

Dr. Grenfell's work has been recognized and rewarded by King George, who received him in private audience a year ago and conferred on him the honors of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George (C.M.G.)

His full name is Wilfred Thomason Grenfell, and he was born in 1865 at Parkgate, Cheshire, England. He received his education at Marlborough and Oxford, and his medical training at the London Hospital. After leaving Oxford, where he played for the University on the rugby team, he became house surgeon at the hospittal under Sir Frederick Treves. He fitted out the first hospital ship for the North Sea fisheries, and cruised with the fishermen from the Bay of Biscay to Iceland.

He has written many articles for magazines and other publications, and lectured in many places, so that he is to-day one of the world's figures.

While handling a "twenty-two" rifle this morning, Odely Taylor, the sixteen-year-old son of Mr. W. L. Taylor, 626 Bethune street, through not knowing that the trigger was at full cock, suffered a painful injury to one of the toes of his left foot. The young fellow was endeavoring to ascertain the reason for the slow work of the ejector, and had placed a shell in the breech to try it. He failed to notice, however, that the trigger was at full cock, and when it touched the lever the gun was discharged. The bullet penetrated his boot and entered the second smallest toe. Dr. Brown was summoned to attend the injury and hopes to save the member. The young lad is at his home, feeling as well as possible under the circumstances.

He will be instructed to have a plumber examine the pipes at his residence.

RE-ORGANIZATION MEETING CITY FOOTBALL LEAGUE FRIDAY

At a meeting to be held in the basement of Park street Baptist church next Friday evening, it is hoped that sufficient interest will be displayed to warrant the reorganization of the City Football League. It is understood that Park street, St. James', St. John's and Knox church will be represented in the league this summer.

All Saints' won the Burnham shield last year, and the club will likely be seen in Midland League company this season.

The City League brought out some good players in its first attempt, and with new material at hand, the club should have even better success.

KETCHEL'S MURDERERS

Jefferson City, Mo., April 15—Appeals of Walter Dipley and Goldie Smith, convicted of the murder of Stanley Ketchel, champion middleweight pugilist have been argued and submitted in the Supreme Court. Each is serving a life sentence.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

The lakeshore towns are endeavoring to reorganize the Midland Baseball League. It is proposed that Oshawa, Bowmanville, Cobourg, Trenton and Belleville make up the circuit, each club sending out to grass a team of homebrews.

A report from Cobourg is to the effect that Leo Downs has been offered a berth in a New York State league. If Downs is good enough to go to Yankee land, he should be able to land a job in the Canadian League.

Weather permitting the local ball club may be expected to seek applications for sole rights of the peanut business at Riverside.

With Montreal and Toronto near at hand and the two international league teams, passing through Peterborough to and from their respective stamping grounds, it may be possible to land an exhibition game here, with the local Canadian Leaguers.

A good base runner makes life miserable for a nervous pitcher. The Giants have a false start from first which upsets many a heaver. The runner, with a fair lead, starts at full speed, to stop after a half dozen steps and dive back. The effect on the pitcher is to "get his goat."

Joe Kelly of Toronto, is letting out Pitcher Cather, who has been taken south with the Leafs for two seasons past. If Kelly does not send him back to the Tri-State, Ottawa will make an effort to secure him.—Citizen.

St. Thomas Times—Eddie Seiver, the former Detroit pitcher, wants to come to St. Thomas and manage the Canadian League team this summer. Eddie, who formerly pitched in the old International and Canadian Leagues, for London, has been out of professional ball for some years, but has remained in Detroit, playing semi-professional ball with the Masonic team in that city. As a southpaw he was one of the best in the business and is said to have a heap of steam left in his old salary arm yet.

President Stanley will keep the letter until the question of ownership of the franchise is decided, and then Eddie's claim will be considered.

Manager Templin has succeeded in landing two more players for his team, a pitcher and an infielder.

The pitcher is Bryan Nork of Gilberton, Penn., who played with Dickinson College for 3 years, and is captain of that team. He cannot report until May 29th. He promises to be one of the best pitchers yet signed.

J. Frank Dolan, who hails from Delaware, has signed a contract with the Peterboro club. He is six feet tall and has all the markings of a great ball player. He has been bitting the ball at a 274 clip, so the Peterboro fans will have the pleasure of watching a second Hans Wagner swat the ball. Dolan will report the 23rd. of this month and will be in great shape.

Manager Templin expects to hear from three other players in a short time including G. H. Christy, a pitcher who was with Atlantic City, two years, and a left hand pitcher of the Haverhill club. He will, in all probability land these men in a few days.

Manager Templin has signed eighteen players but will drop some of these when he gets a better line on them after they work out here and will carry about fourteen men in order to keep under the salary limit.

The Peterboro people will certainly be struck by the baseball bug when they see the team in action.

Manager Templin will surprise a number of the other clubs who seem to have the pennant cinched before playing for it.

LEAP YEAR PROPOSALS.

Two Ancient Laws Giving Women the Right to Make Them.

Although most women are well aware of the great privilege which they may enjoy during leap year, it is not to be presumed that they are all equally conversant with the fact that their prematrimonial right was originally secured to them by a statute law of England enacted in 1606 under James I (1603-25), which readeth thus: "Albeit it is now become a part of the common laws, in regarde to the social relaytions of life, that so often as everie besextile year doeth returne, the ladyes have the sole privileges, during the time continueth, of making love unto the men, which they may doe, either by words or looks, as unto them seemeth proper, moreover, no man will be entitled to the benefit of clergy who dothe refuse to accept the offers of a layde, or who dothe in any wise treat her proposals with slight and contumely."

A Scotch statute of 1228, under Alexander II. (1214-49), however, preceded the above and will appear to be even more stringent:

"It is statet and ordaint that during the year of his maist blissit majestie, ilk fourth year known as leap year, ilk maiden layd of both high and low estait, shall hae liberty to bespeak ye man she likes, albit, if he refuses to tak her to be his wif, he shall be mulched in the sum of one poundis (£) or less as his estait may be, except and anis if he can mak it appear that he is betrothed to ane woman, that he shall then be free."—Harper's.

A Famous Beacon Swept Away.

The Tennyson beacon, on the edge of the Isle of Wight, which a recent gale destroyed, was a landmark for all vessels entering the Solent from the west. It consisted of a tall Iona cross thirty-two feet high with the pedestal and bore the following inscription: "To the memory of Alfred Lord Tennyson this cross, a beacon to sailors, is raised by the people of Freshwater and others, who desire to honor him in England and America." The site on which it stood formed part of the manor of Farringford and was one of the objects of the long daily walk which he took until within a few short years of his death.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Last of the Paris Lanterns.

A relic of the days of terror in the revolution, when the aristocrats were strung up to lanterns in the Paris streets, has disappeared. Until last week the last of these old lanterns, which were pulled up and down on a pulley to a gallows shaped iron rod, still hung opposite the Hotel de Lausanne, on the Quai des Celestins. Some necessary repairs to the qauy made it imperative to pull down the wall, and the lantern has been sent to the Musee Carnavalet. It was the last oil lamp in the Paris streets and until a short time ago was filled and lighted every evening.—London Standard.

Domitian's Dining Floor.

Professor Boni, who has been investigating the ruins of the Domus Flavia on the Palatine, Rome, has discovered almost intact the pavement of the dining hall of the Emperor Domitian. It is about 100 feet square, of oriental granite and is bordered with Numidian marble. The pavement was the richest in any of the imperial palaces of the first century.—Chicago Tribune.

CRANKS IN WASHINGTON.

Why Some Officials Keep Loaded Revolvers on Their Desks.

Five out of the nine well groomed and gentlemanly private secretaries of members of President Taft's cabinet keep loaded revolvers handy in their desks every day of the year. They do not often use them, but there are just enough cranks around Washington and its departments to make a revolver feel good to the touch occasionally.

Mr. Robert O. Bailey, private secretary to Mr. Franklin MacVeagh, secretary of the treasury, keeps his even handier than in a desk drawer. If you were to step back of the big mahogany desk at which Mr. Bailey works you would find a small shelf to the right beside his knee. Upon it there is a businesslike looking 38 caliber revolver. It has been there ever since Mr. Bailey was visited last summer by a man who demanded to see Secretary MacVeagh that he might get "a license for free speech."

Mr. Bailey was alone in the office on a midsummer day. Into it dashed a disheveled individual who had long neglected the art of the safety razor and who was plainly looking for trouble. He rushed up to the desk and, crowding close to Mr. Bailey, brought his fist violently down upon the blotter and shouted—

"I demand a permit for free speech!"

"All right," said Mr. Bailey; "go ahead."

This seemed to be a surprise to the man, who showed a desire to shoot up the place. He recovered himself and stepped back a few paces. Then he began an oration. It lasted ten minutes. At a halt Mr. Bailey put in—"Fine; that's the way. You are all right."

The crank accepted the verdict, made a deep bow and walked out of the room.—New York Herald.

Praise For Home Rule.

London, April 15.—The Government whip last night issued a long list of telegrams which John Redmond, leader of the Nationalist party, has received from the colonies and the United States, approving the home rule bill. They include messages from the Premiers of South Africa, the Australian and Canadian Colonial Ministers, several former Ministers, Cardinal Gibbons, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, and a host of American governors, judges, prelates, mayors and public leaders.

Perth Defeats Bylaw.

Perth, April 15.—A bylaw to loan the local shoe company $25,000 for fifteen years was defeated by being 86 votes short of the required number for it. The vote stood 354 for and 141 against. Had the recent private bill been given the Lieutenant-Governor's signature, the bylaw would have carried.

Tragic News of a Rising.

The adventure in strange lands of Lord Headley, who has entered upon his sixty-seventh year, would provide material for more than one fascinating volume. He is by descent a Wynn of Gwydyr, one of the branch who quarrelled with the parent house in Wales in the sixteenth century, settled in London, and substituted an "i" for a "y."

It is an open secret that one of his adventures forms the mainspring of Mr. Norris's delightful novel "The Credit of the County." This was his expedition to the site of lost civilizations in Mashonaland, and news came that he had been cut to pieces in a native rising. Biographical notices of his career were still being published in country weeklies when he returned safe and sound to England.

Perseverance.

Robert Louis Stevenson tells of a Welsh blacksmith who at the age of twenty-five could neither read nor write. He then heard a chapter of "Robinson Crusoe" read aloud. It was the scene of the wreck, and he was so impressed by the thought of what he missed by his ignorance that he set to work that very day and was not satisfied until he had learned to read Welsh. His disappointment was great when he found all his plans had been thrown away, for he could only obtain an English copy of the book he was so anxious to read. Nothing daunted, he began once more and learned English and at last had the joy and triumph of being able to read the delightful story for himself.

Two Youthful Burglars.

Toronto, April 15.—Two youthful burglars, Joseph Gill, aged 16, of 180 Maria street, and Joseph Ball, aged 15, of 2,156 Dundas street, were arrested early Sunday morning in a lane in the rear of the south side of Dundas street, by P. C. Smith following a series of burglaries. Christopher Sparks, Myrtle avenue, Runnymede, was later arrested at an accomplice.

Smith found Gill and Ball crouching on a shed in the rear of W. R. Sheppard's clothing store, corner of Dundas and Pacific avenue. When the boys were placed in custody they confessed to a series of thefts.

They admitted having broken into the rear of the W. M. Baldwin Co.'s fancy goods store at 21,694 Dundas street and stealing about $5 in cash from the cash registers.

On April 4 they entered the tailoring establishment of A. M. Gabel at 1,741 Dundas street via the coal shute, removing therefrom three suits of clothing valued at $40 and marched out the front door, which was locked by a spring lock. Here they left a hundred 22 cartridges, which they said they found in an empty house near the Humber.

On April 10th they entered Pearce's drug store at 1,631 Dundas street and stole nearly $50 worth of cigars, cigarettes and perfume. Apparently feeling the need of cash they broken open a contribution box for the Muskoka Hospital and removed 30 cents in coppers.

Gill and Sparks have been before the police before on different occasions. They have admitted all the burglaries.

Had Narrow Escape.

Schweitzengen, Germany, April 15.—The fourteen passengers carried by the Schuette Lanz dirigible balloon on its first flight this year had a narrow escape from death Saturday morning near here. When the dirigible ascended, with the inventor, Prof. Schuette, acting as pilot, she reached an altitude of a few hundred feet, when the vertical steering gear jammed and the airship plunged at full speed to the earth, where it buried its bows and the forward gondola in the ground.

The six inmates of this gondola, together with Prof. Schuette and a mechanic, were thrown out with great violence, but nobody except the mechanic, who had his breast crushed in, suffered any serious injury.

The dirigible with the remaining passengers then rose again rapidly into the air, but the water ballast containers had been smashed and the airship was blown helplessly to the other side of the Rhine, where a descent was eventually effected without further mishap.

The dirigible is of unique construction, its frame being a rigid one of wood, while its dimensions are about the same as those of the Zeppelin airships.

Big Junk Thefts.

Toronto, April 15.—Extensive thefts of old copper and brass has been going on from the city Hydro-Electric Commission for some time back and employes have been discharged right and left. This was discovered about the time that Joseph Rosenthal was murdered, when he was lured to the transformer station at the foot of Strachan avenue, on the pretext of securing a quantity of such scrap.

An investigation is now being prosecuted to detect the employes who have been engaging in this form of "high grading," which is said to be carried on in all concerns whose operation entails the constant passing of worn metals.

Tons of this stuff has been properly sold by the purchasing agent of the commission, and the money turned into the coffers of the commission, but other tons of it have been sold to the junk dealers, for which no money has been so turned in, and the sales have been made by those not entitled to sell.

French Must Assert Independence.

Kingston, April 15.—"Is the use of French a right or a favor?" was the subject taken by Prof. J. M. Lanos of the Royal Military College in addressing three hundred French-Canadians of this city. French-Canadians were free men, he declared, and meant to be, and they would do as others intended to do worship, speak and vote as they please.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—We talk of the Goodwin Sands losing people, but I think if any person got on Jackson avenue road it would be a hard job for them to get out again. One of the city officials gave a resident permission to dump the clay out of his cellar on the road, and now this clay has worked up and the wheels of the rigs sink down into it. This road is certainly a disgrace to the city, and the city fathers should take this in hand and do something. Thanking you for your space,

Yours truly,
J.A.R.

CHRISTIANS AND LORD'S SUPPER

What Entitles Christians to Partake of the Sacrament

"What entitles a Christian to partake of the Lord's Supper?" was the subject taken by Rev. W. C. Riddiford at the evening service, yesterday and the discourse proved most interesting. The text was John 15; 14—"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

"I have been asked to answer this question and I shall endeavour to do so, as intelligently and as scripturally as I can," said the preacher. "I am perfectly aware of this fact that the question is conditional, committible and critical. The answer to this question can only be given correctly by seeking to find out just what the mind of the Master is, concerning this vital and important doctrine. The answer we give, must be clear-cut, fearless, and definite, and according to our individual convictions, after a careful and unprejudiced study of God's word.

That I shall be criticized, goes without saying; we must always expect that since we cannot all think alike. The answer that I shall give will of course be open to the fire of the open-communion critics, and the Christian friends who practice infant baptism.

At the commencement I wish to state a fact we must not forget in considering this subject, viz., We must distinguish between a Christian and a visible church member. Faith in Christ admits all who believe in Christ, into the invisible Kingdom of God. But obedience to the commands of Christ, is the only way of admission for believers into the visible church of Christ. The command of Christ is, "Believe and be baptized and ye shall be saved."

Men refuse to be immersed, say, First—Because of ignorance. — The Berean spirit is dead. They will not search the scriptures to see whether these things are so.

Secondly—Misapprehension. — They fail to see, the real meaning and value of Believers' Baptism.

Thirdly—Prejudice.—They refuse to see. Like Nelson at Trafalgar, they put the glass to their blind eye, and exclaim, "I cannot see it." None are so blind as those who will not see.

Why is it that all Christian churches refuse the Quakers or friends admission into their church membership? Because they have have not been baptized. And yet there are not a more devout, more Christlike body of Christians in the world to-day.

Baptism is the door of admission into the visible church, and as there is only "One Lord, one faith, one baptism," therefore only those who have been baptized according to the revealed mode of scripture and the example of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ are eligible to partake of the Lord's supper. For an unimmersed believer is unbaptized, and by virtue of that cannot become a member of the visible church according as Baptist interpret the teachings of the New Testament. We stand by our principles, and give and allow full freedom for all others to do the same. It is the Lord's table not ours. If it were ours we might invite whom we pleased, without consulting any statute book, human or Divine, but the fact that it is the Lord's table leaves us no choice but to receive those only to it who have complied with the Lord's requirements. But, some one may ask, "How is it that other Christian churches will admit or allow Baptists to commune with them, while Baptists refuse to extend the same courtesy?" Let me answer that briefly and to the point:

First—Because they cannot question the validity of a Baptist's baptism; it is perfectly scriptural, without a shadow of a doubt, and they know it, although they refuse to practice it.

Second—In so doing they make no compromise of their principles. Other Christian churches believe the scriptures to teach and endorse three modes of water baptism. Baptists believe the scriptures teach and endorse but one. Believers' Baptism, and not infant sprinkling which is an innovation of Rome. By inviting Pedobaptists Baptists would compromise their principles, believing as they do, that an unimmersed believer is unbaptised. We do no more than do our Methodist, Presbyterian and other Christian friends, when we insist upon baptism as a prerequisite to church membership. It is not close communion, but close baptism we contend for. We are as narrow as the Christ Himself in the matter of baptism, we can be no broader, because He has said: Follow Me. Therefore we are buried with Him in baptism.

Baptists admit to the Lord's Supper all who have been scripturally baptized. Other churches do not. As a matter of fact every man knows, who is well read in church history, that infant communion grew up side by side with infant baptism, and is practised at this very hour by the Greek and Syrian churches. To be consistent all churches that practice infant baptism should also practice infant communion.

Thus our Pedobaptist friends are closer communionists than Baptists, we admit all who have been baptized to the Lord's table, they exclude about two-thirds of those who are by virtue of so-called baptism elegible to partake of it. That is a hard nut to crack. But it is true.

Let me in closing strive to answer from scripture, three questions:

First—Whey should a Christian be baptized?

Second—When should a Christian be baptized?

Third—What purpose does baptism serve?

At the close of the interesting discourse Mr. Riddiford, gave a scriptural Bible-reading upon the Why, What, When, and How of Believers' Baptism.

CHEMONG PARK HOTEL OPENING THIS MONTH

Admirers and patrons of the pretty summer resort of Chemong will be greatly pleased to learn that the park hotel will this summer be operated in a more pretentious and inviting manner than ever before. The hotel ownership has changed hands, and will this year be under the capable management of Mr. Robert E. Davis, of Peterborough. The new proprietor is well qualified by experience to successfully manage the business, and intends neglecting no detail which will add to the attractiveness of the hotel and the comfort of his guests.

The Chemong hotel is being entirely re-painted, and remodelled and visitors will be surprised at the effect produced when the work is completed. The hotel cottage, which is kept open for the benefit of guests and tourists, is also being repaired wherever necessary.

The meals will be prepared this summer by a first-class chef.

The new proprietor, in compliance with the liquor license instructions, will not sell, or cause to be sold, intoxicating liquor of any description, only soft liquids being purchasable. Neither will objectionable loafing, so often connected with hotels, be countenanced.

The hotel will open, it is expected, on April 19th.

Mr. Davis, the new proprietor, was formerly with the Trent Canal, and his branching out in the hotel business leaves a vacancy in the service, which Mr. J. H. McClelland states will be difficult to fill.

REV. CHAS. CARPENTER AT CAMPBELLFORD

Rev. Chas. Carpenter, rector of Christ church, Campbellford and formerly of St. Johns, is meeting with good success. The reports at the recent vestry meeting showed progress in the church work. The report on the meeting says in part:

Owing to the increased membership of the choir and under the untiring efforts of the rector and the organist, it was unanimously carried that the members of the choir be invested. This is to take place as soon as possible and arrangements are now under way in the hands of the committee.

It was also unanimously decided to use the Duplex Envelope System in connection with the weekly offertory, one half to go to the church funds and the other half to missions.

HORSE BROKE ITS LEG AND WAS SHOT

A very exciting runaway occurred Saturday afternoon near the corner of Charlotte and George streets, when a team, the property of Mr. M. Storey, the local liveryman, was frightened by an auto truck and made a dash for liberty. The driver tried to control them, but unfortunately one of the reins broke which gave him absolutely no power to hande the team. The horses dashed down the street but one of them slipped near T. Moore's marble works with the result that a leg was broken, while the other continued his mad flight. As it was impossible to set the horse's leg, the beast was shot to end its sufferings. Mr. Storey estimates his loss at $200.00, as he refused an offer of $400.00 for the team a few days ago.

The animal was able to walk to the vacant lot, next to the Customs House, and here Detective Newhall ended its misery.

CANVASSERS WILL WANT TO KNOW

A meeting of all those interested in the canvass of the United Sunday Schools Association, on April 23rd, is called to-morrow night at the Y.M.C.A. parlors.

Over one hundred canvassers will be on the job on the evening of April 23rd, to make a visit to every house in the city. Each canvasser will be armed with a card, or census report, which contains a list of questions, that the party called upon will be kindly asked to answer. The nature of the questions are such as: Are you living at home, or boarding? What church do you attend, and are you a member? Have you ever been to Sunday school this year and how often? If not attending Sunday school, why?

The canvassers will make a valiant effort to obtain information from every party called upon.

The United Sunday School Association is a permanent organization in the city. The officers locally are: J. J. Hartley; Vice-President; John Edgar, and Sec.-Treas., Sandford Hall.

FINE REHEARSAL

The St. George's Choral Society held a fine rehearsal Friday night in St. Andrew's hall. There was a full attendance, and the numbers were rendered in a magnificent style. The Male Quartette and the Gypsy Chorus gave their selections without a hitch, and these alone will be well worth hearing on Tuesday night, April 16. The public are requested to secure their tickets at once, as it is understood there is a big demand for seats. The final rehearsal will take place at three o'clock to-morrow (Tuesday) in the Opera House.

KNOX CHURCH ANNIVERSARY

Rev. Thos. Mitchell Was Heard by Large Congregations

The congregation and pastor of Knox Presbyterian church have every reason to feel justly proud, and fully satisfied with the success of the services held on Sunday, marking the fifth anniversary of the foundation of their commodious and handsome edifice on Rubidge street. Unusually representative congregations including many visitors from other churches, were present at the services during the day. The special efforts of the pastor to make the anniversary a red-letter day in the history of the church, were rewarded with a liberal and encouraging degree of success. Not only did the pastor exert himself, but the choir also, the latter providing a choice and very effective program of choral worship, adding materially to the effectiveness of the services of the day.

The major portion of the credit for the large congregations, was undoubtedly due, however to the presence in the pulpit of Rev. T. H. Mitchell, M.A.B.D, of London, Ont., one of the foremost and most capable leaders of Presbyterianism to-day. The abilities and usefulness of this noted divine, have endeared him to his large congregation in London, Ont., and his presence yesterday at Knox was appreciated and much enjoyed by all who heard him.

His evening message was filled with the gospel of cheerfulness, and contained a strong plea for the dissemination of more joy and contentment among those with whom we are daily thrown in contact. He enlarged also upon the dynamic power of the gospel in eradicating sin from the human hearts, and lifting souls plunged into degradation to pinnacles of purity, happiness and salvation.

"This work of spreading Christianity" he said, "is being done to-day, in almost every instance, by some humble believer in Jesus Christ. One famous slum worker in the great city of London, says that there is nothing can transform a radically bad man, into a radically good man like the word of God. Any man who doubts the divinity of Jesus Christ, let him sit at the feet of the Master for a sufficient time and then let him say what he thinks. He will believe, he cannot help but believe.

The pastor urged the acceptance of the gospel regardless of creed. He hoped that the day of church union would speedily materialize. He deplored conditions in some places where there are unnecessary churches each supporting a pastor, when many of these men would be serving the Master to better advantage in the mission fields of the West, where there is such a crying need for preachers. The personal qualities a successful evangelist must possess were also mentioned. He must have a glad message and joy and cheerfulness in his heart at all times. The speaker felt sometimes that the joy of living seemed to have departed from some Christians. Because the Bible did not record of Jesus ever laughing, still it was probable that Jesus laughed so often that the recorder did not think it necessary to put it down.

Righteousness, peace and joy formed the recipe for a cheerful heart.

In the home, mothers often exhausted themselves dusting and in other ways, to the neglect of their happiness and the cultivation of their children's spiritual minds.

SOME VITAL STATISTICS

The forty-first report of vital statistics of the province of Ontario, for the year ending December 31st, 1910, has just been published and brings to light some interesting facts. The report contains more registration of births, marriages and deaths, than any previous one.

Among other things in the report is printed a comparison of the vital statistics in the different cities in Ontario, for the year 1910. These show that Peterborough had a comparatively low marriage rate, a high death rate and high birth rate. This city's birth rate per 1,000 population for that year was 32.7, and was less than three other cities in Ontario, namely Toronto, Hamilton and Port Arthur.

The report's marriage specifications are also interesting, showing that in that year, 13,824 Methodists; 9,529 Presbyterians, 9,489 Anglicans; 7,351 Roman Catholics and 3,280 Baptists were married. Of these only a minority married people of their own denomination.

In 1910 there were 844 inter-marriages between Protestants and Roman Catholics. Of these 447 of the Protestants were Anglicans and 360 were Methodists. Seven Christians, five from the Anglican, and 2 from the Roman Catholic church, married Jews.

The report also states that by ages more men and women marry between the ages of 20 and 24 than at any other age.

FREIGHT CARS DERAILED NEAR DOWNER'S CORNERS

A small wreck occurred yesterday on the Belleville line of the G.T.R. near Downer's Corners, when four box cars and a caboose were derailed. The accident was caused by a rail plate coming loose which allowed the rails to spread. The contents of the cars were wheat and corn and although they command a high price in the commercial world, they took a drop yesterday. None of the train crew were injured and the grain was transported by other cars.

Of 31,058 emigrants who left Ireland in 1911, 22,000 went to the U.S. and 5,478 to Canada.

OUR FIRST COMPOSER

CALIXTE LAVALLEE TAKES HIGH RANK IN MUSIC.

The Man Who Wrote the Inspiring Music of "O Canada" and Whose Death Was So Pathetic Showed Real Genius as a Musical Creator—He Is Far Better Known Abroad Than He Is In His Native Land.

Canada can boast, unabashed before the elder nations, at least one musical composer who possessed first-rate creative genius, and who, within the short creative period of his fitful and unhappy life, produced works marked by versatility in form and style, and distinguished by beautiful melodic invention, by rich, noble harmonies, and by emotional variety, says Dr. J. D. Logan in The Canadian Courier. This composer was Calixa Lavallee.

Unfortunately, Lavallee has been most admired for his less, if not least, admirable music. In Canada, his native land, he has achieved fame solely through a single composition, the so-called "Chant National," which neither melodically nor emotionally possesses the satisfying qualities of several of his other compositions. Indubitably, however, he is to be signalized as the first creative Canadian composer, by virtue of nativity, education, sphere of activity, inventive genius, and number of meritorious compositions in all styles. "Lavallee," said Dr. A. S. Vogt (the most eminent living Canadian musician and creative composer) "impressed me as a man of extraordinary ability, not as a merely clever executant of the piano; not as a merely adroit deviser of pretty melodies and harmonies, but as a musical genius, a genuinely creative artist."

Lavallee's constructive years did not begin until 1878, when he had removed from Montreal to Quebec City. In that year he composed a beautiful and brilliant Cantata which was sung by a choir of 500 voices in welcome to the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise on their arrival at Quebec as vice-regent and vice-reine of Canada. His creative period seems to have ended as abruptly as it began. For in 1883 he is touring the United States, as solo pianist, with Mme. Zetelka Gerster, famous at that time as an operatic and coloratura soprano. But during his brief productive period Lavallee composed prodigiously, having to his credit many songs of pure beauty, a Cantata, an Oratorio ("Tu es Petrus"), an Opera ("La Veuve"), three authorities say two Operas; also a Symphony, two orchestral Suites, several Overtures and String Quartets, many piano pieces and etudes de concert ("Le Papillon" is the best known), and, finally, the so-called "Chant National" (1880).

CALIXA LAVALLEE.
HON. JUDGE ROUTHIER.

As for the latter, there is nothing in its origin or in its musical structure and emotional appeal to cause it to be, as it has become, a bone of racial contention and spleen in Canada. Its melody was composed as a melody as such, and not as a setting to the words by Hon. Judge Routhier, who says: "I learned to sing it without words, and I set myself to compose a poem which was in harmony with its ideas, rhythm and time." The worthy poet of "O Canada" is here indulging in metaphor. A melody constructed purely out of the imagination or musical sense, and not composed expressely as an interpretation of specific words and sentiment, contains no ideas except musical ideas, melodic and harmonic, made up of related tones. In itself Lavallee's melody, which was a pure construction of the musical sense, is without sex or race, and devoid of any specific sentiment or meaning. Further, it was composed to be sung, as it was in 1880 at Quebec, in celebrating the religious Festival of Jean Baptiste. Naturally, therefore, in tempo, structure, and emotional expression it has all the qualities of a Hymn, and might have had any literary setting which was consistent with the tempo, structure and emotional demands.

Whether or not it wins the distinction of becoming Canada's national anthem, let us remember Lavalle as a brilliant and patriotic fellow-countryman who has left our musicians a splendid ideal and ourselves a goodly heritage for our delectation and inspiration. Alas, that we recall how this brilliant creative Canadian composer passed, as Schubert and Mozart and others of the same gifts—lonely and alone. He died at Boston, Jan. 21, 1891, "un frere des nuits tragiques"—companion with those whose night of life is starless of love and of hope.

TRIED POISON ON HIMSELF.

A Swiss Professor's Test With Berries of the Deadly Nightshade.

Not since the famous "cholera breakfast" many years ago at which the German professor Pettenkofer demonstrated on his own body that certain bacilli supposed to be those of cholera weren't that kind after all has so much interest been taken in a toxicological experiment as in that made recently by Dr. Kannegiesser of the University of Neuchatel.

He set himself the task of testing the process of poisoning by berries of the deadly nightshade, from four to ten of which, according to the age and strength of the subject, are commonly supposed to be a fatal dose. Dr. Kannegiesser had the courage to swallow ten berries.

Seven minutes afterward the chief poisonous element of belladonna, atropine, began its work. Dizziness, dryness in the throat, and after an hour impairment of sight followed in due course.

The experimenter industriously made notes, but when he felt a leaden sensation creeping over him and when his limbs refused to move at the bidding of the brain, he thought he had gone far enough and took a powerful emetic. Notwithstanding this the symptoms continued.

The next morning he found himself suffering from temporary loss of memory, hallucinations and painful convulsions in the arms and legs. It was a week before Dr. Kannegiesser's iron constitution overcame the poisonous effects.

His observations are spoken of very highly by the medical profession, but he says that he wouldn't make another experiment of this kind for all the wealth of the Indies.—Geneva Cor. New York Sun.

WHEN PRICES WERE LOW.

A Lucrative Job and the Cost of Living In Maine In 1832.

Congressman Asher Hinds of Maine and former Speaker Cannon were eating in the house restaurant, sampling the food, which they found high enough, and, of course, there was some demurring on their part and an appraisement made of the high cost of living, whose pinch even congressmen feel.

"There is much to be said on both sides of the question," broached Uncle Joe.

"And that is quite true. The cost of living is quite relative," said Hinds. He went on:

"I have just finished reading the life of Hannibal Hamlin of Maine, as you know, and in it he tells how in 1832 the citizens of Paris Hill, Me., met to arrange to get out a weekly paper for the town and engaged an editor for it at $1.50 a week."

"What, $1.50 a week!" exclaimed Uncle Joe.

"Yes, a week," continued Hinds.

"And Hamlin goes on to say that not only did they get a man to do it, but even a Harvard graduate, who was glad to get the lucrative job. And they even thought they were paying him well, and with that $1.50 a week, Hamlin says, the editor was able to obtain the best board in town, as good as we pay many times more for today, and have enough money left for the incidentals of life."

"Well, it is hard to believe Hamlin was not lying," commented Uncle Joe.—Boston Advertiser.

Armor Plate That Hit Back.

The manner in which soft iron may be converted into hard faced armor plate by the infusion process appears in the case of a test which has been made recently. A bullet was fired from a rifle at a distance of thirty-six feet against the surface of an iron plate which had been treated by the infusion process, striking with velocity of 2,700 feet a second. The hardened surface caused the rifle ball to rebound with such directness that it struck the stock of the gun from which it had been fired, imbedding itself in the wood and narrowly escaping the person of the marksman by whom the shot had been fired.—A. J. Thompson in Cassier's Magazine.

Our Last Year's Crops.

The department of agriculture estimates the value of all farm products in this country for 1911 at $8,417,000,000. The cotton crop value is put at $775,000,000 in fiber and seed; the wheat crop $600,000,000, the hay crop $700,000,000, the corn crop $1,700,000,000, the oat crop $380,000,000, the potato crop $282,000,000. Strange as it may seem, the value of the eggs laid by the American hen is almost equal to that of the cotton crop and greater than that of the wheat crop—$700,000,000.

Exciting Whale Chase.

The people of Balallan, a village on Loch Erisort, Isle of Lewis, in the Outer Hebrides, have had an exciting and profitable experience. Fishermen sighted a school of fifty-four whales and drove them up the loch until the whales reached the rapids. Then the entire male population of Balallan formed a bridge of boats across the loch to prevent the whales from escaping and drove the big fellows into shallow water, where they were killed.

Mexico City Waking Up.

After long delay, due to many changes of officials, threatened invasion of yellow fever from the east and of bubonic plague from the west, the board of health has been able to take up the question of open funeral cars. It has ordered that all dead transported through the streets of Mexico City must be inclosed in an air tight casket.—Mexican Herald.

"Youth must play if it is to live," says a lady writer. And age must work for the same reason.

NIAGARA FALLS.

Treaty That Safeguards the Scenic Beauty of the Cataract.

The United States and Canada have negotiated a treaty which controls the diversion of water from the Niagara river and preserves the scenic grandeur of Niagara falls for all time. The treaty goes into full effect automatically in March, upon the expiration of the law which now limits some of its provisions.

The international agreement was made in response to a general demand that the question of water diversion be settled once and for all in accordance with expert opinion. The treaty makers had exhaustive tests conducted by hydraulic engineers, and it was determined that diversions should not exceed 36,000 cubic feet a second on the Canadian side and 20,000 cubic feet a second on the American side, out of a total flow of 240,000 cubic feet a second.

The use of this quantity of water for power purposes, the engineers found, would not affect the appearance of the falls sufficiently for the eye to detect. Since only about half the quantity permitted by the treaty is now diverted, twice the present horsepower can be produced without endangering the scenic beauty of the cataract.—Exchange.

Rails For Wagons.

An idea new to this country, but already successfully tried in Europe, is the use of iron rails for wagons on heavy grades. As seen in Philadelphia at the Chestnut street bridge, where they are being laid, these rails are about eight inches wide on the top flange. This flange is turned up along the sides. These sides have notches in them so that the wagon wheel will catch instead of slide when it is desired to turn out. These tracks are entirely separate and apart from those on which the trolley cars run.—Philadelphia Record.

Angel of the Campanile.

Venice's Campanile is so near completion that the angel which surmounted it is about to be hoisted to its former place. The angel was shattered when the tower collapsed, but the pieces [illegible] been put together again. The head, arms and legs are of solid bronze, the body is made of plates of hammered copper and the whole figure weighs 2,400 pounds. Instead of being fixed as it was before it will be set on a moving base so that the outspread wings will make it act as a weather vane.

Sport of the Antipodes.

A favorite sport in New Zealand, as also in Australia and Tasmania, is competition in wood chopping and sawing, and in these contests, which attract a great deal of interest, the championships are always won through the use of American tools. In fact, the expert woodsman working for a prize would never think of using any other kind of tools.

Worse Than the North Pole.

Canada's meteorological service has been making observations of the upper air with sounding balloons for the past year. Of sixteen balloons sent up eight have been recovered to the present writing. The lowest temperature recorded was 94 degrees below [illegible] altitude of about 8.7 miles [illegible]

RAREST SILVER DOLLAR.

It Is the Continental Currency Pattern Coin of 1776.

A United States silver pattern dollar, dated 1776 and valued at $5,000, which was exhibited at Chicago at the convention of the American Numismatic association, brought to the immediate attention of both the general public and collectors of silver a piece which for rarity, value and historical worth completely eclipses the celebrated 1804 dollar or, indeed, any other coin in the United States series, says the Washington Post. Even in some respects it is more interesting than the excessively rare and valuable silver pattern dollar or "mark" of 1783 proposed by Robert Morris, the "financier of the Revolution."

This coin, which is known as the continental currency dollar, is owned by H. O. Granberg of Oshkosh, Wis., and represents unquestionably the very first metallic issue to bear the stamp of the United States, or United Colonies, as the confederation was originally known. The continental dollar preceded by nine years the issue of the first regularly authorized cent of 1787—the Fugio or Franklin cent—and the issue of the latter coin, no doubt, was largely influenced by this first dollar, for it bore its principal features of design.

The continental currency dollar is about the size of an ordinary silver dollar and contains 378 grains of silver. On the obverse the principal design is a sun shining on a sundial, with the word "Fugio" to the left. Below the dial is the motto, "Mind Your Business," a saying attributed to Franklin. This central design is inclosed by two circles, while around the border in large letters is the inscription "Continental Currency, 1776." On the reverse is the circle of thirteen links, each of which bears the name of one of the thirteen colonies. In the center is a radiation which incloses a double circle, in which are the words "American Congress. We Are One."

No definite information as to where the continental currency dollar was made can now be obtained, but it is thought to have been produced by one of the engravers of Birmingham, England, in which city were made many of the coins that were circulated in this country during colonial days.

Sir James Whitney called the Opposition leader's attention to the fact that the Government intended to make state aid conditional upon the employment of teachers capable of giving instruction in English, and where necessary to give financial aid towards the payment of such teachers.

"If the teachers are not there to be obtained this could not be done," was the Opposition leader's parting shot.

Z. Mageau (Lib., Sturgeon Falls) arose to follow his leader with a speech but on Sir James calling his attention to the fact that it was getting on for 1 o'clock and, that his making a speech at this time would necessitate the prolonging of the session over Tuesday, he agreed not to do so.

The House then rose until 12 noon Tuesday when the Legislature will be formally prorogued by Lieutenant-Governor Sir John Gibson.

In the Legislature on Saturday morning J. C. Elliott (W. Middlesex) moved the second reading of the bill to amend the Law Reform Act.

"We opposed the first reading of the bill and we will object to the second reading," said Hon. J. J. Foy. "The Law Reform Act was not passed in the interests of the Bar, but of the public. This Government some years ago promised law reform and incident to this was the doing away with the multiplicity of appeals."

N. W. Rowell argued that the judges of the province were almost unanimously opposed to three sections of the act.

"I do not propose to bring the judges into politics," declared Sir James. "If they are brought in it will not be by me."

The bill was declared lost on division.

The Premier moved that as a number of members had been absent from the Legislature through illness, that the House agree to pay all members their indemnity.

To this Allan Studholme, the Labor member for East Hamilton, objected on the ground that a number of members who were not ill had not attended as often as they should.

Sir James declared that he agreed with what Mr. Studholme stated, and that he would therefore change the resolution to name the three members who had been taken ill. They were Hon. A. G. MacKay, North Grey; Hon. A. J. Matheson, Lanark, and A. M. Rankin, Frontenac.

The Labor member announced that he would second the resolution as altered and it was carried.

Royal Bank Loses Waterways Suit.

Edmonton, Alta., April 15.—The Supreme Court of Alberta, sitting en banc in Edmonton Saturday morning, handed down its decision in the Alberta and Great Waterways appeal case, dismissing the appeal of the Royal Bank from the decision rendered by Justice Stuart in the lower court. Chief Justice Harvey, as the court's spokesman, said that each member of it had written a decision, but on the main question the entire court had been unanimous.

M. Hays, Montreal, Mrs. John C. Hogeboon, Toronto, Sir Cosmouff Gordon and Lady Gordon, Mrs. John Jacob Astor and Miss Margaret Hays (thought to be Mrs. Chas. M. Hays,) and Bruce Ismay, managing director of the White Star Line.

From no source is there any mention of Captain Smith, the veteran commander of the Titanic, and there is every reason to believe that this gallant seaman, who has had so much misfortune during the past few years, went to the bottom with his ship.

BOAT WENT DOWN IN EARLY MORNING

From the wireless message, the bare facts stand out that the Titanic sank at two-twenty Monday morning, and the revised estimate of the loss of life is placed at 1234.

The Carpathia should arrive at New York on Friday, with 866 survivors.

Wireless messages to St. John, Newfoundland, report the Allan Liner Virginian en route there, possibly with additional survivors on board, but early this morning it had not been confirmed that the Virginian or her sister ship, Parisian had participated in the rescue work or had survivors on board.

HAYS PARTY ALL SAFE

Montreal, April 16.—Early this morning, Mr. Peers Davidson, who is son-in-law to Chas. M. Hays, received a private message from Newfoundland that all the members of the Hays party had been saved. The message read "C. M. Hays, Mrs. Hays, and Mr. and Mrs. Thornton Davidson all safe."

From this despatch it might be gathered that the party had been picked up by some other vessel, other than the Carpathia. On the other hand, Mrs. Hays is reported as being on the latter vessel while the Grand Trunk president's name has not yet appeared on the lists of survivors on that boat.

NEWS OF THE SINKING WITHHELD

New York, N. Y.—Utterly stunned by the loss of life attending the wreck of the Titanic, New York halted today. It was hard to realize that this latest creation of marine architecture which only yesterday had been branded as "unsinkable" now lay two miles below the surface of the Atlantic off the banks of Newfoundland. Distracting scenes were enacted all night and today at the offices of the White Star line on lower Broadway, where distracted men, women and children, many hysterical and weeping stormed the offices and vainly begged for some word of comfort regarding the fate of their loved ones. For some inexpicable reason the White Star line refrained from making public facts in its possession for hours after they had been received. Officials of the company admitted today that they knew of the ship having gone down several hours before the announcement was made but they defended their action by saying that until Captain Haddock of the Olympic confirmed the report they had not felt justified in alarming the people. Vincent Astor, only son of John Jacob Astor, was one of the few who obtained admission to the private office of Vice President Franklin. An hour later he emerged weeping bitterly and was helped into his waiting automobile. Sylvester Byrnes, private secretary to Isador Staus remained at the office all night only leaving at eight-thirty this morning when he had satisfied himself that his employer and nearly all the other noted men on board had perished. From the wireless report received it would seem that no class distinction had been made when the rescue work began. The women of steerage apparently were cared for in the same manner as the women of the first and second class. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, at first supposed to have been lost, cabled his friends here today that he did not sail on the Titanic.

Montreal Apr. 16.—A wireless message received here early this afternoon says, Charles M. Hays is aboard the Carpathia. Previous messages announcing that his wife and daughter were on that vessel made no mention of his name.

Canadians Who Back Home Rule.

London, April 16.—John Redmond, Irish Nationalist leader, has received messages from Judge Doherty, Montreal; Hon. Mr. Devlin, Quebec; Mayor Guerin, Montreal; Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, and Hon. A. E. McPhillips, K.C., Victoria, B.C., commending the home rule bill.

Unionist papers point out they have been issued from the Government whip's office. Therefore, it is needless to say they are all favorable to home rule. Though the terms of the bill are yet unpublished, the home rule council has issued 60 favorable messages from Irish Protestants.

POLICEMAN SHOT AT BURGLAR

Windsor, Ont., April 16.—The Windsor and L. S. Railway office at Kingsville was entered early Sunday morning. The burglar tried to crack the safe, but the charge only loosened the door.

The Kingsville night policeman fired at the yeggman, but the burglar escaped. Sunday night an attempt was made to rob two Windsor residences.

New Pumping Station.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 16.—The water commission will apply to the Queen Victoria Park Commission for permission to erect a new pumping station in the park. It is proposed to construct a combination powerhouse and pumping plant, generating fifteen hundred electric horse-power, besides supplying the city with water.

WOODSTOCK VOTED DOWN BYLAW

Woodstock, April 16.—By a vote of 493 in favor, and 507 against, the citizens of Woodstock yesterday defeated the bylaw to raise $75,000 for a new city hall to replace the present one, which has been in use for the last fifty years. As a result of the close vote it is altogether likely that the question will again be put to the people in the near future.

The bylaw to grant aid by way of bonus to the Woodstock Automobile Co. received 901 votes in its favor and 163 against. On account of the fact that this bylaw requires a majority of three-fifths of the total number of voters on the list, will have to be counted before it is known if the bylaw passed or not.

Arrested For Murder.

Lynn, Mass., April 16.—A warrant calling for the arrest of William A. Dorr, alias Willis A. Dow, on the charge of murder of George E. Marsh, the wealthy manufacturer, was sworn out by Chief of Police Thomas M. Burkes, late yesterday.

The police yesterday located in a Boston garage an automobile which they believe to be the one in which Marsh's body was taken to the spot where it was found. They found a 32-calibre automatic rifle and a box partly filled with cartridges in the bottom.

CHARLES M. HAYS.
President of the Grand Trunk Railway. He was among those rescued.

PASTOR PUTS END TO LIFE

Wyoming, Ont., April 16.—About 8 o'clock yesterday morning, while in a fit of temporary insanity, Rev. J. M. Gunne of this village, got out of bed and with his double-barrelled gun shot himself in the neck, dying almost instantly. The deceased had been brooding over various matters for some weeks, which caused sleeplessness, and undoubtedly unhinged his mind.

No inquest will be held.

STORY OF THE GREATEST DISASTER IN MARINE HISTORY

Suspect Foul Play.

Parry Sound, April 16.—With a badly battered head and swollen beyond recognition, the body of John Tennant, was found Sunday evening floating in the harbor. Tennant had come to town about the middle of December last, from his home near Ambro Station, and since that time he has not been seen nor any trace of him found. Prior to his death he was known to have had $50 in his possession, and there are suspicions of foul play.

Turn Down for Rockefeller.

Washington, April 16.—Upon protests of a number of members that the creation of a great corporation of $100,000,000 might compete with private interests and in the end in controlling the Government, the House yesterday refused to pass a bill incorporating the Rockefeller Foundation, and struck it from the calendar. The bill has been before Congress for two years.

Escaped Huge Ice Field.

Liverpool, April 16.—The Canadian Pacific Steamship Co.'s liner Empress of Britain, which left St. John, N.B., on April 5, arrived here yesterday, and reported having encountered an ice field of a hundred miles in extent when three days out from Halifax.

It is most unusual at this time of year to meet ice floes so far south.

Disasters of the Atlantic in 1873 and La Bourgogne in 1898 Are Recalled—Loss of Life Was 574 and 571 Respectively—Sister Liners Give Every Aid Possible.

New York, April 16.—More than 1,300 persons, it is feared, sank to their death early yesterday, when within four hours after she crashed into an iceberg the mammoth White Star Line steamer Titanic, bound from Liverpool to New York on her maiden voyage, went to the bottom off the Newfoundland Banks. Of the approximately 2,200 persons on board the giant liner, some of them of world-wide prominence, only 866 are known to have been saved. The White Star Line offices in New York, while keeping up hope to the last, were free to admit that there had been "horrible loss of life."

Accepting the early estimates of the fatality list as accurate, the disaster is the greatest in the marine history of the world. Nearest approaching it in magnitude were the disasters to the steamer Atlantic, in 1875, when 574 lives were lost, and the La Bourgogne, in 1898, with a fatality list of 571. Should it prove that other liners, notably the Allan liners Parisian and Virginian, known to have been in the vicinity of the Titanic early yesterday, had picked up others of her passengers, the extent of the calamity would fortunately be greatly reduced. This hope still remains.

News of the sinking of the liner and the terrible loss of life in consequence came early last evening with all the greater shock, because hope had been buoyed up all day by reports that the steamship, although badly damaged, was not in a sinking condition, and that all her passengers had been safely taken off. The messages were mostly unofficial, however, and none came direct from the liner, so that a lurking fear remained of possible bad news to come.

Shortly after 7 o'clock last night there came flashing over the wires from Cape Race, within 400 miles of which the liner in the treacherous Newfoundland Banks region, had struck the berg, which brought her to grief, that at 2.20 o'clock Monday morning, 3 hours and 55 minutes after receiving her death blow, the Titanic had sunk.

The news came from the steamer Carpathia, relayed by the White Star liner Olympic, and revealed that by the time the Carpathia, outward bound from New York and racing for the Titanic on a wireless call, reached the scene, the doomed vessel had sunk.

Left on the surface, however, were lifeboats from the Titanic, and in them, as appears from the meagre reports received up to a late hour, were some 866 survivors of the disaster. These, according to the advices, the Carpathia picked up, and is now on her way with them to New York.

For the rest of the scene as the Carpathia came up was one of desolation. All that remained of the $10,000,000 floating palace, on which nearly 1,400 passengers had been voyaging luxuriously to this side of the Atlantic, were some bits of wreckage. The biggest ship in the world had gone down, snuffing out in her downward plunge, it appeared, hundreds of human lives.

A significant line in the Cape Race despatch was the announcement that of those saved by the Carpathia nearly all were women and children. Should it prove that no other vessel picked up any passengers of the sinking liner, this might mean that few of the men on board had been saved, as the proportion of women and children among the passengers was large.

The same fact would likewise spell the doom of practically the entire crew.

In the cabin were 260 women and children, but it is not known how many there were among the 740 third-class passengers.

In the first cabin there were 128 women and 15 children, and in the second cabin 79 women and 8 children.

A ray of hope appeared shortly before 11 o'clock last night in a message to New York from the operator at the Marconi wireless station at Sable Island, near the scene of the disaster. Answering an enquiry regarding the delivery of wireless messages to the passengers of the Titanic, the operator reported that it was difficult to deliver them, "as the passengers are believed to be dispersed among several vessels." Even this faint indication that other vessels than the Carpathia had picked up survivors of the Titanic was eagerly seized upon by thousands of relatives and friends of those who had set sail on her for this country.

Even the survivors of the Titanic disaster have gone through hardships of exposure and peril which may have left many of them in a serious condition. A despatch announced at the White Star offices late last night said that those rescued by the Carpathia were picked up from a "small fleet" of lifeboats at 10.30 o'clock Monday morning. It was eight hours before that that the Titanic is reported to have gone to the bottom.

In the opinion of Vice-President Franklin the Carpathia will hasten with all possible speed to make this port, in order that those survivors suffering worst from exposure may be able to obtain proper medical attention.

Amid confusion at the local offices, the situation was studied as calmly as possible. Mr. Franklin figured, that, notwithstanding his fervent hope to the contrary, the Allan Line steamer Virginian and Parisian could have hardly reached the scene of the disaster in time to have been of assistance. When the Virginion first reported her receipt of the "C.Q.D." signal she said she was not likely to be able to reach the Titanic before 10 a.m. in the morning. This hour would have been nearly eight hours after the Titanic sank. It is equally doubtful that the Parisian could have reached the scene in time.

The Titanic, with a length of 882 feet six inches and a width of 92 feet six inches. She was launched at Belfast last May, and this was her maiden trip. She had a displacement of 66,000 tons and 45,000 tons register.

Her rudder alone weighed 100 tons. To build the vessel cost nearly $10,000,000. She was a four-funnel, trile-screw steamer; hpad eleven decks; was provided with fifteen watertight bulkheads, and had accommodation for 3,000 passengers—600 saloon, 500 second-class, and 1,900 steerage. She carried a crew of 860. In height she was 175 feet from the top of the funnels to keel.

Canadians Among Missing.

Toronto, April 16.—H. G. Thorley, Toronto agent of the White Star Line, received from W. W. Jeffries, the New York agent, a telegram advising that Captain Haddock of the Olympic reported that the Titanic foundered at about two o'clock yesterday morning. The Carpathia has on board all the surviving passengers and crew, numbering 675. The Carpathia is steaming to New York.

Later in the evening Mr. Thorley received the following messages from Mr. Jeffries:

"Regret exceedingly to advise that Captain Haddock of the Olympic Marconis that the Titanic foundered about two a.m. Monday. Carpathian has on board all surviving passengers and crew, numbering 675. The Carpathian is now proceeding to New York."

Shortly before midnight, Mr. Thorley received another message, reading as follows:

"Referring to previous telegram, earlier advices state that Parisian and Victorian have passengers on board, but have not yet received confirmation."

The news of the terrible disaster to the Titanic coming after the reassuring messages of the forenoon, which indicated that not only were the passengers saved, but that there was good prospects of towing the disabled leviathan into port at Halifax, came like a veritable bolt from the blue.

There were a number of Canadian passengers listed on the steamer Titanic which met with disaster yesterday. Among them were:

Major Arthur G. Peuchen, general manager of the Standard Chemical Co., Toronto.

J. J. Borebank, well known in real estate circles in Toronto and in Winnipeg, and Mrs. John C. Hogeboom, Toronto.

Other Canadians in the first-class cabin list included:

Charles M. Hays, wife and daughter, Montreal.

Thornton Davidson and wife (son-in-law of C. M. Hays), Montreal.

J. Hugo Ross (formerly of Toronto), Winnipeg.

Thompson Beattie, Winnipeg, formerly of Fergus, Ont.

Mr. George E. Graham, buyer for Eaton's chinaware department, Winnipeg.

Dr. Alfred Pain, Hamilton, son of Captain Albert Pain, a well-known commission merchant. He finished his training in the Hamilton City Hospital, and has been studying in the hospitals of Europe.

Mark Fortune and three daughters, Winnipeg.

Markland Molson, broker, Montreal.

Mr. H. J. Allison, wife and daughter, Montreal.

H. Markland Molson of the Molson's Bank directorate, Montreal.

W. H. Parr, Montreal.

Mr. and Mrs. Allison, Miss Allison, Master Allison, Montreal.

He Says He Does Not Think Any Sane English or Scottish Members Will Support the Proposals — It Would Not Be Fair to Burden Ireland With a Deficit of England's Making, Replies Samuel.

London, April 16.—Ex-Premier A. J. Balfour resumed the debate in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon on the "Government of Ireland Bill" which was introduced in Parliament April 11 by Premier Asquith.

Mr. Balfour ridiculed the Government measure for Irish home rule, describing it as "unsymmetrical and botched federal scheme, utterly unworthy of British statesmanship."

"Was this lopsided scheme," the Opposition speaker asked, "imitating the architect of the great federal system beyond the seas?"

The alleged supremacy of the Imperial Parliament, Mr. Balfour declared yesterday in the House in condemning home rule, was about equivalent to the ancient claims of British sovereigns to be kings of France.

Mr. Balfour said that he did not believe that any sane English or Scottish members would support the insane proposals which divided the suggested federal system by customs barriers. If Ireland, he said, could use the customs to differentiate against foreign nations, the Government would find itself involved in appalling difficulties concerning the "most favored nation clause."

Mr. Balfour declared that, while other nations, including Germany and the United States and the British colonies, felt that if they were to hold their places in the world it must be by integration. Great Britain was to undergo a process of disintegration though the proposed lopsided federation.

Right Hon. H. L. Samuel, Postmaster-General, replying to Mr. Balfour yesterday, said that Mr. Balfour's arguments against the home rule bill might with equal justification be advanced against any scheme of colonial self-government.

Mr. Samuel, dealing with the subject of finance, declared it would be unjust in the first instance to burden Ireland with the whole of the deficit. The state of her finances was not her fault, but the result of English financial administration. Her revenue was paid on the Irish scale, while her expenditure was on the English scale, and it was therefore impossible, after accustoming the Irish to this scale of expenditure, to impose upon them the burden of finding the whole expenditure.

GRAHAM LAUNCHES BOLT AT FRENCH ROMAN CATHOLICS

Ex-Minister of Railways at Banquet In Hamilton Says They Must Be Put Out of Business If They Continue to Fight British Institutions—Mr. Rowell Gets a Good Reception From Liberals of Hamilton.

Hamilton, April 16.—"It is time we got rid of the French Roman Catholics, if they continue to attack British institutions and laws as they are doing at present," declared Hon. George P. Graham at the Liberal Club banquet last night.

Hon. Mr. Graham spoke glowingly of the record of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and stated that great as he was as a leader, he was still greater in Opposition. The speaker reviewed the history of Canada and the Empire, referred to Sir James Whitney as Ontario's autocrat, asked if the people of Canada were aware of the innate weakness of the present Government, and wound up by urging the Liberals to get together and be prepared for the next election.

N. W. Rowell, the Liberal leader, was received with prolonged cheers and handclapping. He outlined the abolish-the-bar policy of the Liberal party and stated that not only would the bar be abolished, but the club licenses also. The Conservative policy of abolishing the treating system was minutely examined and ruthlessly torn to ribbons. "The people of Canada demanded a temperance policy," said Mr. Rowell, "and the Liberal party will work to that end."

About 400 guests were present.

Hit by Street Car.

Toronto, April 16.—Miss Mabel McPowell of 98 Bedford road, was knocked down by a street car on Avenue road, shortly after six o'clock last night, and so badly injured that she is not expected to recover. She was picked up unconscious, suffering from a fracture at the base of the skull and a laceration of the brain.

Doctors Advised An Operation. How She Escaped Told By Herself.

Buckner, Mo.—"For more than a year I suffered agonies from female troubles and the doctors at last decided there was no help for me unless I went to the hospital for an operation. I was awfully against that operation, and as a last resort wrote to you for special advice and I told you just what I suffered with bearing down pains, backache, shooting pains in my left side, and at times I could not touch my foot to the floor without screaming. I was short of breath, had smothered spells, felt dull and draggy all the time. I could not do any work, and oh how I dreaded to have an operation.

"I received a letter full of kind advice, which I followed, and if I had only written her a year ago I would have been saved so much suffering, for today I am a well woman. I am now keeping house again and do every bit of my own work. Every one in this part of the country knows it was Lydia E. HELPING CHRONIC DRUNKS

The amendment to the Municipal Act, passed by the Legislature to enable magistrates to send habitual drunks to an industrial farm for an indeterminate sentence—not to exceed two years—is in line with Hon. W. J. Hanna's humanitarian and modern prison reform policy. In our treatment of inebriates, we have merely been thrusting such as come under the displeasure of the law into prison for two or three months, forgetting about them until we have them on our hands again. The day for that sort of treatment is disappearing. Under the new law, the industrial farm movement will be encouraged and stimulated, and some day we may hope to see all countries with prison farms instead of the county lock-ups. There is no reformative or reclamatory effect in sending a habitual drunkard to prison each time he offends. Society merely confirms him in his lack of moral fibre, his lack of will-power. It burdens itself with him year in and year out, because it will not take the trouble to give him the right treatment, the proper surroundings to bring him back to his normal state. The industrial farm which Toronto has started, and Hamilton is about to start, will be made to give habitual drunks a chance to get back to the soil of Mother Earth, that they may feel the regenerating influences of a close-to-nature life. The indeterminate sentence allows the retention of drunks until they are broken of their bad habits, and does not mean that they shall return to prison life with the unceasing regularity short jail terms seem to induce.

WASTE LANDS OF THE EAST

Dr. B. F. Fernon, head of the faculty of forestry, of Toronto University, is about to survey over 1,000 square miles of waste lands in Eastern Canada, largely in the counties of Peterborough and Haliburton, with a view to discover the cause of their present condition and what remedies can be applied to restore them to usefulness. Forest fires are largely blamed for denuding the land.

There is no doubt that intelligent application of modern methods can do much to reclaim and bring into usefulness tracts of territory now idle, but all this will not remove the basic reason for the land being what it is.

Hundreds of square miles of the districts referred to are in the direct line of the Laurentine Chain, or rocky territory which beginning south of Montreal cuts diagonally across the country to the shores of Georgian Bay. This land — or rock — is the oldest in the world. Geologists tell us it was the first formed and to appear above the waters. It is the basic rock of the universe. There is nothing below it. It cannot be penetrated, if any ever so desired to do.

The surface formation is irregular, as appears at Stony Lake, where depressions form lakes. Other depressions contain ample soil and offer fair sites for farms. But this area of productivity is not continuous.

Those who ride by C.P.R. from Havelock to Smith's Falls are struck with the enormous stretch of country seemingly barren of anything but scrub-pine. This impression is somewhat misleading.

Back of the rocky ridge, at Kaladar, for instance, is a large tract of old settled farming land, very good and well populated. South, toward Lake Ontario, it is the same. The railway line is laid through the poorest part of the district. From a district, say 80 miles long and 7 miles wide, nothing will ever to taken except minerals, unless it be a load or two of telephone poles. The large timber has been removed long ago.

Were this part of Central Ontario as good farming land as is found to the east and west and did it extend north to the Ottawa, then there would be a succession of thriving towns where now exist only a few scattered villages of slow, or no growth at all. What the future holds in mineral development is all the district has to look for.

The annual report on the License law just issued, shows that the convictions for drunkenness reached the record figure of 5,820 in the province an increase of 757 over the previous year. Since 1899 there has been a steady increase, despite the anti-legislation and passing into effect of the local option measure. Of course the population has increased in the meantime, and the cities compare unfavorable with the smaller towns as might be expected. The rural districts show a diminution in convictions.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, April 15.—Business over the cable in Manitoba spring wheat was very quiet, the demand being limited and bids 6d to 1s below what exporters offered at Saturday night. The local demand for oats was better. Spring wheat flour, strong at an advance of 10c per barrel. Export trade quiet, but domestic demand fair. Millfeed firm and scarce. Butter weak, owing to larger receipts and limited demand. A good trade was done in eggs.

Corn—American No. 2 yellow, 89c.

Oats—Canadian western, No. 2, 54c to 54½c; do., No. 3, 50½c; extra No. 1 feed, 51½c; No. 2 local white, 50½c; No. 3 local white, 49½c; No. 4 local white, 48½c.

Barley—Manitoba feed, 65c; malting, $1.06 to $1.10.

Buckwheat—No. 2, 74c to 75c.

Flour—Man. spring wheat patents, firsts, $5.80; seconds, $5.30; strong bakers, $5.10; winter patents, choice, $5.10 to $5.35; straight rollers, $4.65 to $4.75; straight rollers, bags, $2.15 to $2.25.

Rolled oats—Barrels, $5.35; bag of 90 lbs., $2.55.

Hay, No. 2, per ton, car lots, $14.50 to $15.

Cheese—Finest westerns, 14¼c to 14½c.

Butter—Choicest creamery, 32c to 32½c; seconds, 31c to 31½c.

Eggs—Fresh, 23c to 24c.

Potatoes—Per bag, car lots, $1.75.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, April 15.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 105 cars—2106 cattle, 606 hogs, 387 sheep and lambs and 170 calves.

D. A. McDonald sold for McDonald & Halligan: 68 calves, at $5.50 to $8 cwt.; 60 yearling lambs, at $7.25 to $9; 31 sheep, at $5 to $6.50; 14 bucks, at $5 to $5.50; 11 spring lambs, at $3.50 to $5.75 each.

McDonald & Halligan sold on Saturday: Two decks of hogs at $8.75, fed and watered; 4 veal calves, 185 lbs. each, at $8.50 per cwt.; 8 bobs at $2.50 each.

Cows—10, 1161 lbs., at $5.75; 1, 1250 lbs., at $5.75; 7, 1095 lbs., at $5.60; 6, 1150 lbs., at $5.60; 3, 1030 lbs., at $5.25; 1, 1180 lbs., at $5.25; 2, 1060 lbs., at $5.30; 11, 1107 lbs., at $5.40; 2, 1185 lbs., at $5; 3, 1000 lbs., at $5; 1, 1040 lbs., at $4.

Bulls—1, 1650 lbs., at $5.90; 1, 1480 lbs., at $5.65; 1, 1380 lbs., at $4.85.

Milkers—1 at $60.

Hogs—22, 175 lbs., at $8.65; 20, 158 lbs., at $8.65; 2, 275 lbs., at $8.65; 1, 420 lbs., at $7.65 (all fed and watered).

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 15.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending April 13 were 1000 cattle, 75 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 1800 calves. The supply on the market this morning for sale consisted of 500 cattle, 25 sheep and lambs, 10,000 hogs and 600 calves.

The undertone to the market for cattle was strong and prices for steers were fully 25c per cwt. higher, while bulls and cows showed an advance of 25c to 50c since this day week, which was due to the small offerings, somewhat of a scarcity of finished cattle thruout the country, the advance in prices demanded for the same, and the increased demand. A few full loads of choice steers, weighing from 1200 to 1300 pounds each, changed hands at $7, and good steers, weighing from 1000 to 1100 pounds each, brought $6.50 to $6.75 per cwt. A few choice bulls sold as high as $6.25 to $6.50, and choice cows at $5.75 to $6 per cwt.

The strong feeling which has characterized the market for hogs for the past month, still continues to be the main feature of the trade, prices to-day having scored another advance of 15c to 25c per cwt., making a net rise of 65c since the 25th of last month with every indication of them going still higher in the near future. An active trade was done at $9.25 to $9.40 per cwt. for selected lots, weighed off the cars.

The market for sheep and lambs was quiet on account of the very limited supplies offered and prices ruled firm. A few spring lambs sold at from $4 to $7 each, as to quality. The demand for calves was good, but as the offerings were only of medium quality prices ruled lower.

Butchers cattle, choice, $7.15 to $7.25 per cwt.; medium, $6 to $7; common, $4.50 to $5.50; choice cows, $5.75 to $6; medium, $4.75 to $5.50; bulls, $4 to $6.50; milkers, choice, each, $70 to $75; common and medium, each, $55 to $65; springers, $35 to $45.

Sheep, ewes, $5 to $5.25; bucks and culls, $4.75; lambs, $7.25 to $7.50.

Hogs, fed and watered, f.o.b., $8.25 to $9.40. Calves, $2 to $8.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, April 15.—Cattle—Receipts, 3300. Market, active, stronger; prime steers, $8 to $8.25; shipping steers, $7 to $7.50; butcher grades, $6 to $7.25; heifers, $4.25 to $6.50; cows, $3 to $3.50; milch cows and springers, $20 to $65; bulls, $3.60 to $6.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 17,000. Market, fairly active and easier. Choice lambs, $8.25 to $8.50; cull to fair, $7 to $8; yearlings, $7 to $7.50; sheep, $3.50 to $6.40.

Hogs—Receipts, 13,600. Market active, 5c to 10c higher. Yorkers, $8 to $8.20; pigs, $6.75 to $6.85; mixed, $8.15 to $8.25; heavy, $8.20 to $8.30; roughs, $7 to $7.25; stags, $6 to $6.25.

Catarrhal Bad Breath

Corrected Quickly by the Use of Catarrhozone

Catarrh is an inflammation. Where there is inflammation there is always more or less offensive secretion. Inflammation may be of the very active sort, but it is often of the slow kind, and this is the particular form in which the breath is rendered offensive and the presence of the sufferer becomes an offence to every person of delicate sensibility.

Bad breath is in itself sufficient to urge you to correct it, because one dislikes to be unpleasant to their friends, but this form of catarrh is dangerous because it supplies a hotbed for the development of Consumption or of other diseases of the throat and lungs.

Bad breath is an evidence that the microbes have found a good resting place and are carrying on their evil inroads into the health of the body.

Catarrhozone acts at once and destroys these minute organisms, but it does more—it heals the inflamed surfaces in which they found a nesting place and consequently removes both cause and effects of their action.

If we only highly estimated the value of prevention and used Catarrhozone at the beginning of a cold or just before it becomes well seated, the deadly ravages of Consumption would be stayed and the terrible agonies of sufferers of Asthma or Bronchitis completely abolished.

There is no remedy as effective for bad breath, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, etc., as Catarrhozone. Besides being healing and soothing it is germ destroying. Nothing ever offered to the public can compare with it in its promptness, efficiency, and permanency of action, and you can buy it from any dealer in medicine throughout the Dominion of Canada, 25c, 50c, and $1.00 sizes. By mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Ont.

NERVOUSNESS AND DYSPEPSIA

CURED BY "FRUIT-A-TIVES" THE GREAT FRUIT MEDICINE

In Nervous Dyspepsia, the Dyspepsia does not come from the Nervousness—but the latter trouble does come from the Dyspepsia.

The stomach is a network of nerves. Now if all these nerves are irritated by improper food, hasty eating, or poisoned by gases from the constipated bowels, then they will make one nervous.

"Fruit-a-tives" cures both the Nervousness and the Dyspepsia because "Fruit-a-tives" cures all stomach troubles, keeps the stomach sweet and clean, and enables you to eat and sleep as you did when a child.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers, or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Lady Betty Across the Water

By C. N. & A. M. WILLIAMSON

Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

I've written home, of course. I wrote the day after I arrived. At first I felt I ought to cable, but if I did they might send at once, and on second thoughts I decided it wasn't necessary to go to the expense. So I just wrote to mother to say I couldn't stand it with Mrs. Ess Kay on account of her brother and I'd left suddenly to join Sally Woodburn in the country, where I was boarding quite close to her. I wrote to Mrs. Ess Kay, too, and said the same thing, asking her to kindly send on my boxes.

She sent the boxes by what they call "express," but didn't answer my letter, which rather astonished me, as I had thought she would scold and had dreaded it. But when I told Sally she wasn't as much surprised as I was. She knew already everything that happened after I ran away from the Moorings and told me all about it, which interested me a great deal. Mrs. Ess Kay had written her some things, and Mrs. Pitchley (whose maid is an intimate friend of Mrs. Ess Kay's Louise) had supplied all the missing details.

It seems that the day after the pink ball Mrs. Ess Kay had one of her headaches—and no wonder. Feeling very ill, she didn't take much interest in me and took it for granted when Louise said I wasn't out of my room that I wanted to sleep till luncheon.

Potter had been so furious that he thought to punish me for my sins by sulking. Mrs. Ess Kay did not appear at luncheon, and Potter went out somewhere. But when I didn't show myself or even ring, the servants began to think it odd and spoke to Louise. She knocked at my door, and when after rapping several times there was no answer she opened it to find the room empty, the bed smooth, my boxes packed and all Mrs. Ess Kay's presents to me spread out on a sofa.

By that time it was after 2, and, if only they had known, I was leaving the Waldorf-Astoria to take the train for Chicago with Mr. Brett.

Mrs. Ess Kay was so nervous with her headache and the reaction after all her work in getting up the great affair that when she was told I was nowhere to be found she had hysterics and slapped Louise.

Potter was sent for to the Casino and came home in a rage. They talked things over and made up their minds that I had either caught a ship sailing for home or else had gone to Chicago to join Sally. If it hadn't been that they were afraid of a scandal coming out in some horrid society paper they would have applied to the police for help, but as it was they didn't dare, and Potter said he could manage everything himself.

A ship really had sailed that day, so, as well as telegraphing to Sally, Potter went to the offices, then to the docks, and made all sorts of inquiries. From what he heard about some people who had engaged berths at the last minute he couldn't be quite sure I wasn't one of them, having gone under an assumed name. To add to the trouble, no answer came from Sally. Mrs. Hale, according to instructions, had opened the telegram and, knowing something of the story from Sally, wasn't anxious to relieve Mrs. Ess Kay's mind about me in too much of a hurry. Instead of having the message wired again she inclosed it in an envelope and sent it on to Sally by post, so there was another delay, and they knew nothing for certain until a letter from Sally and one from me arrived at about the same time.

Sally's opinion was and is that Mrs. Ess Kay has something up her sleeve; that she won't write to me because she wants to show how hurt and scandalized she is by my ungracious conduct, but that she has some idea for getting even with me sooner or later. If she hadn't that to keep her up Sally thinks she couldn't have resisted answering my letter with a tirade. Fortunately she can't claw me away from the Trowbridges and make me marry Potter—even if he would have me now after all my badness—otherwise she would perhaps have tried to act at once. And she can't have me put in prison on bread and water and solitary confinement, as no doubt she would like to do. Still, I don't feel quite easy in my mind about her silence, lest Sally may be right about some disagreeable plan she's hatching.

I've found out everything about all the members of the family at Valley farm now, and I've got acquainted with most of the neighbors. They call them neighbors if they live anywhere within twelve or fifteen miles.

Mr. Trowbridge, although a farmer who works in his own fields, is an "honorable." I was surprised when I heard that, as I didn't suppose people had titles in America. But he's a senator or something in his own state which is very important, so he is called "honorable" officially and on letters, as one is at home if that's all one can scrape up by way of a courtesy title.

The two young men who come in to eat with us, but are never seen about the house at any other time, are "farm hands," though they are not treated at all like servants, and Mr. Trowbridge lends them the newest books and magazines (of which he has quantities) to read in the evening.

It is very strange about Patty and Ide. Though Patty is so quiet, almost meek in her ways, and dresses so plainly and is quite contented to work in the hot kitchen, cooking and washing dishes, it turns out that she is a very rich girl, or will be. She is an orphan, and her grandfather, although a farmer, has more than a million dollars (which sounds tremendous, but wouldn't be as impressive, I suppose, if one did it in pounds), and when he dies, as he must before long, as he is very old, Patty will have all his money.

Young people get on his nerves, so Patty lives with the Trowbridges, who are friends of his, and helps Mrs. Trowbridge with her work.

Ide really is a sort of servant, but she would go away instantly if anybody called her that, and she is so afraid some one may think she is inferior to the others in the house because she is paid wages for her work that she does her hair elaborately, wears smarter dresses than the rest and puts herself rather forward with strangers so as to impress them. She wouldn't even like to be called a "help," but says that she "obliges" Mrs. Trowbridge, and she wouldn't stop long enough to draw another breath if she were not treated better if anything than Patty.

After "tea" we drove to the Emporium at Hermann's Corners. The Emporium is always open till half past 9, and there was going to be an "ice cream festival" there that night. I didn't know what an ice cream festival meant, but Mr. Trowbridge said I should see for myself, and it would probably be different from anything I had yet experienced. Mr. Trowbridge and Mr. Brett and I all drove in the buggy. It was rather a squeeze in one seat, but it was fun, and we were very merry.

The rest all squashed into a big wagon and sat on the hay. I would have gone in that way, too, but Mr. Trowbridge wanted me to try his horse, and we could hear the others laughing every minute as they came jolting on behind us.

It was about seven miles to Hermann's Corners, and after a lovely drive through charming, peaceful country we arrived just as it was beginning to be dusk.

I couldn't have imagined such a place as the Emporium, and when I was in the thick of it I said to myself that it would be worth one's while coming over to the States just to visit it, if nothing else. If I had to choose between I believe I'd rather see it than Niagara falls, for one knows Niagara falls from biographs and things, and nothing short of actually seeing could give one the slightest idea of Mr. Whit Walker and his Emporium.

My first impression of the Emporium was a huge, rambling wooden building rather like a vast barn with a dozen smaller barns tacked on to it and windows let in. It is painted pea green and has a rough veranda running partly around it—a high veranda with no steps, or, if any, at such long intervals that you must search for them. But as there's no pavement we just scrambled out of the buggy and cart on to the veranda, and there we were landed among the most extraordinary collection of things I ever dreamed of. The stock in the Emporium having overflowed from the inside on to the veranda, we stumbled about among boxes of eggs, sewing machines, crates of dishes, garden tools, brooms, rocking chairs, perambulators, boots, "canned" fruit, children's toys, luggage, green vegetables, ice cream freezers, bales of calico, men's suits, piled up books, clotheslines and a thousand other "goods."

Just as we threaded our way through the groups of young men, who looked at us a good deal, people were lighting the gas in the Emporium. It was incandescent and blazed up suddenly with a fierce light as if it were a volcano having an eruption. All the women inside (there was quite a crowd of them, bareheaded or in perfectly fascinating frilled sunbonnets) shrieked and then giggled. A man who was surrounded by girls said something we couldn't hear which made everybody laugh, and Mr. Trowbridge exclaimed:

"That's Whit, sure, holding court. Couldn't be anybody else."

MAGISTRATE SPEAKS FOR ZAM-BUK

Magistrate Perry, of Goldfields, B.C., believes in making a good thing known. Writing of Zam-Buk, the great household balm, he says:—"After a very fair trial I have proved Zam-Buk eminently satisfactory. In my case it cured a skin rash of five years' standing which no doctor had been able to do any good for. I would certainly encourage any person to keep Zam-Buk in his home." The magistrate is quite right. Every home needs Zam-Buk! Unequalled for cuts, burns, bruises, eczema, blood poisoning and all skin diseases. All stores and druggists sell it at 50 cents a box. Sure cure for piles.

DON'T NEGLECT THAT SORE!

A Chicago man has just died from blood poisoning arising from neglect of a small sore. Don't neglect a cut, a patch of eczema, or an open sore of any kind. The air is full of poison germs, waiting to start up their evil results in neglected sores, wounds, etc. In Zam-Buk is safety. Zam-Buk is so highly antiseptic that applied to any skindisease or injury it makes blood poisoning impossible. In using Zam-Buk you have three processes going on at once for Zam-Buk is healing soothing and antiseptic. Try it without delay.

Bamboozled the Lawyer.

Amongst the many stories told concerning Coventry Patmore, the poet, the following, perhaps, is one of the most amusing:

When Patmore lived in his beautiful old house at Hastings, a kind of Harold Skimpole contrived to make his acquaintance.

"That fellow was one of the cleverest I ever came across," said Patmore, when speaking about him to a personal friend who relates the story.

"One day in the early part of our acquaintance he came to me for my advice. His wife had purchased a costume at one of the principal local drapers, but when an assistant was sent for to make certain alterations, the latter packed it up and carried it back to the shop. What should he do?

"'Go to Z——,' I said, naming my lawyer; and off he started.

"'Summon the people,' said Z——; 'that is what you had better do. But wait, have you paid for the dress? If not, send a check and summon them afterwards.'

"'On my word, I never thought of that,' exclaimed the other, innocently; 'and as I don't happen to have my purse, just oblige me with your check for the amount!'"

"And I'll be hanged," added Coventry Patmore, chuckling, "if he didn't bamboozle the lawyer. Instead of stepping over the way he went straight home. The dress was never paid for, and Z—— never got back his money."

Tennyson clung as tenaciously to his old boots as to his old hats. William Allingham records in his diary on March 20, 1881: "Browning dined at Tennyson's last night. Tennyson in great force. He said, 'This pair of dress boots is forty years old.' We all looked at them, and I said it was good evidence of the immortality of the soul."—London Chronicle.

YOU CAN BE ABSOLUTELY SURE OF VALUES

If you carefully read the store advertisements and follow them in your buying.

Merchants advertise certain lines because they know these lines will advertise their stores. Because there is something about certain goods, they are put in conspicuous places and the people are told about them. It may be the exclusiveness or newness of design, it may be an unusual quality, it may be an attractive price.

But there is at least one definite, sure reason why a merchant advertises an article and is willing to stake the reputation of his store upon it.

Therefore, when you see an article advertised in THE REVIEW, depend upon it, that article is good value, as good value as can be obtained in that particular store.

Berlin is stirred by a report that the Kaiser when in Venice recently said that if his people were "as intelligent and patriotic" as the Italians, he would conquer half Europe.

Paderewski's tour of South Africa having not been a financial success, he says the people are ill-mannered and lack sentiment for the true charm of music.

Important Advice To SPECTACLE WEARERS

Three Plain Facts

1 That more eyes are injured by the injurious use of Glasses than by any other known cause.

2 That a great number of people are wearing spectacles unsuitable for them, and for which their eyes have not been tested.

3 That the old fashioned and unscientific method of testing the eyes by trying on various spectacles of different strengths until the sight is apparently suited, is to say the least of it, dangerous.

It cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of those who suffer from defective eye-sight that proper lenses and correctly fitting frames are absolutely essential for comfortable spectacle wearing. We grind our own lenses.

NAYLOR—ROSEBOROUGH

A very quiet, but pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Roseborough, 2912 Victoria Ave., Regina Sask., when his sister, Florence, formerly of Peterboro, was united in marriage to Mr. A. Elgin Naylor, by Rev. H. T. Lewis.

After a short trip east Mr. and Mrs. Naylor will reside in Regina.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To The Editor of The Review,

Sir—The letter in the Examiner, signed "Elector" regarding the slight injury done to the wharf from high water, draws attention to what probably will be done soon; the placing of a responsible and skilled engineer, in complete control of the canal.

"Elector" draws attention to this matter and his remarks, will, no doubt have due weight at Ottawa, in fact it is only reasonable that it should have been done long ago.

PETERBORO'S LIFT LOCK SEEN IN KINEMACOLOR BY VISITOR FROM LONDON ENG.

An example of the far reaching effect of advertising is afforded in the statement of one of Peterborough's newest citizens. Yesterday a visitor at the immigration offices in this city informed the Review that just before leaving England a few weeks ago he saw moving pictures of boats passing through the local lift lock, in a picture hall in London.

These pictures are those taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway last summer. It will be remembered that the C.P.R. sent a representative to this city towards the end of last August who took over two thousand feet of films of the lift lock and canal. These pictures have now been going the rounds of the picture houses for some time and have been shown not only in Canada and the United States, but also in parts of Europe. The moving pictures are especially important inasmuch as they were taken by the Kinemacolor process, which shows the objects in natural colors.

CONGREGATIONAL RALLY HELD AT KNOX CHURCH

"The best gathering we have ever held," was the comment last evening in Knox church lecture hall, at the close of the evening program. The gathering was a large one, scarcely a vacant seat and many in the gallery, and the program itself could well be described as excellent. The program under the direction of Rev. Mr. Keith, who occupied the chair, was as follows:

Orchestra.
Solo—Mr. Morphet.
Piano duet—The Misses Chiles.
Solo—Miss Chalmers.
Violin solo—Dr. Park.
Solo—Mr. Downey.
Solo—Mr. John Anderson.
Address—Rev. Mr. Geggie.
Orchestra.
Addresses, by Rev. Mr Rollins and Rev. Mr Pogue.
Orchestra.

Each selection was thoroughly enjoyed by the audience.

The address of the evening was by Rev. Mr. Geggie, of Toronto, and needless to say he held his hearers spell bound with his wit and zeal. He had no particular theme but in a most interesting way he told of the work carried on in the Club in his church in Toronto in making the people from the old land feel at home. His efforts have met with abundant success as his club has a membership of 300 men and 100 women.

He was followed by Rev. Mr Rollins and Rev. Mr Pogue, each giving a message of greeting from their church. Another milestone has been passed in Knox church and they start out on another year with the brightest prospects.

GRACE JOHNSON
as Necia, in "The Barrier," Grand Opera House—matinee and night—Saturday, April 20. Sale opens Thursday.

"THE MAN ON THE BOX"

For Friday, April 19, at the Grand the attraction will be "The man on The Box" one of the most delightful comedy dramas ever offered to the public. The play has been dramatized by Grace Livingston Furniss, and it tells a bright wholesome tale, which scintillates and sparkles from the rise to the fall of the curtain. Nearly everybody has read the novel and will readily remember how the mischief-loving young lieutenant Robert Worburton, on the night of Washington's greatest ball, to play a practical joke on his sister, disguises himself as her coachman, intending to drive her and her chum home at a law-defying speed rate, snatch a kiss from his sister, and vanish before she could find out the trie. Everything starts in very nicely for the lieutenant's scheme, but, by a mistake in carriage signals, he mounts the box of the wrong carriage, and, ignorant of the change, drives away at a reckless speed. He gets the kiss, however, from a strange girl, Betty Annesley, a Colonel's daughter, and is afterwards arrested, locked-up on the charge of fast-driving, and disorderly conduct, and is heavily fined the next morning. It would be a shame to tell any more of the plot of this delightful play, it must be seen to be appreciated. The principal role of Lieut. Robert Worburton was created by that excellent American actor, Henry E. Dixey, and in it he scored one of his greatest successes. The piece had an unusually long run on Broadway, and afterwards toured most successfully in all of the larger cities.

Seats go on sale Wednesday morning.

"THE BARRIER"

"The Barrier" which comes to the Grand next Saturday, April 20, matinee and evening, dramatized by Eugene Presbrey from the thrilling and human story by Rex Beach, is to be presented on this, its first transcontinental tour, by the same company which had so long a run in the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York. Heading this company is Norval McGregor, a sterling actor of well known ability, who will interpret the role of John Gale. The very sympathetic role of Necia, whose supposed taint of Indian blood is the "Barrier" between her and Capt. Burrell, will be in the hands of Grace Johnson, who as especially selected by Mr. Beach, as the typical impersonator of this, his best loved character. Capt. Burrell will be interpreted by Lee Millar. No Creek Lee, the unique comedy character of the last frontier by Max Steinle, a comedian of parts and fame; Stark, the best villain of the day, is alloted to Bryce Howatson and his accomplice Runnion, will be played by Geo. Byron. Poleon, the unique French Canadian, will be handled most acceptably by George Cleveland, and Alunna will be acted by Mattie Hyde, making, all in all, a very exceptional cast. The New York settings, properties and effects will all be used.

The story of "The Barrier" is to well known to need repetition; it is by far the best and the most popular from Beach's pen, and the facts on which it is based were gathered by him during his six years in "the last west" at the early impressionable age of his first twenties. The strange country, the near-to-nature characters, the wildness of the frontier, and the unique characteristics of it all made a deep impression upon Mr. Beach's mind, and in his writing, he has shadowed forth that lawlessness and that freedom which have long been associated with this little known region. And, by the way, it is not the frozen Klondyke Alaska that Mr. Beach depicts, but the sunny, warm farming region, almost unknown to anyone else of the literary world. In transcribing "The Barrier" into a play, Mr. Beach fortunately obtained the services of Eugene Presbrey, a skilled dramatist, of sympathetic touch and marked ability; the result is a masterly bit of real life transferred to the stage without loss of atmosphere or effect. It will be found a fit vehicle for the talents of this very strong company.

Reeve Howden Says Alderman Made This Statement

Monaghan Council to Meet Likely This Week

Mr. W. G. Howden, dropped into the Review to-day, to explain matters in connection with the alleged "raw deal," which the Property Committee felt themselves subjected to, at the hands of the Reeve and the North Monaghan Board of Health.

The reason Mr. Howden gave for his negotiations to purchase the dumping ground plot, was that a member of the Council came to him and gave him to understand that the Property Committee's option on the site was of no use. Mr. Jackson, the owner, also informed him that the city did not propose to purchase the land, and rather than let Mr. Jackson dispose of it to anyone else, Mr. Howden recognizing it as good property, purchased it himself.

The Reeve's explanation for not meeting the Property Committee last night was that it was impossible for him to gather the Board of Health together in time, and furthermore that he did not clearly understand the arrangements made.

Mr. Howden, while admitting that it was a point of law on which he was not positive, felt that the township council had precedence over the Board of Health in the matter of letting the property be used as a refuse ground.

Mr. E. A. Peck, the solicitor for North Monaghan Council, is looking after their interests in the matter.

Mr. Howden says that the property in that section desired for the city is boggy and that it would be found unsatisfactory as a dumping ground.

The North Monaghan Council will likely meet this week. It is understood objection will also be made to the Minicolo property being used as a dump.

DIVISIONAL COURT

Carter vs. Toronto Railway Co.—An appeal by defendants from the judgment of the County Court of Peterborough, of Jan. 13, 1912. Defendants' counsel states that plaintiffs' counsel is not ready to proceed and wishes an enlargement, to which he does not object. Enlarged until the May Sittings.—Mail and Empire.

In the above case the plaintiff, now a local postman, was awarded $450 damages by Judge Huycke in his action for damages against the Toronto Railway Company for injuries received in their employ.

PRESENTATIONS TO THE CURLERS

Club Members Also Remember Secretary Ferguson and Caretaker McIntosh.

About forty or fifty members of the Peterborough Curling Club assembled in the curling rink last night for the annual presentation of the prizes, won in the schedule games, and in the local bonspiel.

The president, Mr. J. H. Connal discharged the duties of chairman in a most acceptable manner. The president opened the meeting with a few eulogistic remarks concerning the past season, and thanked the members of the curling club for the energy and readiness they displayed in supporting the undertakings of the club, during the past winter.

Mr. John A. Cameron, donor of the Sailor Boy prizes for the winning rink in the schedule games, presented those prizes, Mr. Ross Camerom receiving them on behalf of the victorious quartette, namely, Messrs McKnight, Archibald, Cameron and Dr. Wightman.

The second prize donated by Mr. J. H. Ferguson was presented by Mr. Connal to Mr. Hill who received them on behalf of his rink, skipped by Mr. G. O. Maitland.

The 1st prize in the local bonspiel was presented by Mr. Cameron, to skip W. J. Thompson, who led the victors. The second prize, presented by Mr T. E. B. Yeates on behalf of the club, went to Wm. Lang's rink; whose representative was Mr. M. C. Tooley.

The 1st prize consolation was presented by Mr. R. Hicks, and received by Mr. Wm. Turner, on behalf of J. E. A. Fitzgerald's rink. The 2nd. consolation prize was presented by Mr. Felix Brownscombe, to Mr. W. T. Hall, the representative of Mr. H. T. Foote's rink.

SECRETARY REMEMBERED.

This was followed by the presentation of a purse of money to Mr. J. H. Ferguson, the energetic secretary of the club. Mr. Hicks presented the purse to Mr. Ferguson and expressed his appreciation of his untiring efforts, during the last few years and particularly last season. All were aware of the masterly way in which Mr. Ferguson had handled the affairs of the rink and this purse was a token of their gratitude to him. Mr. Ferguson made a brief reply, thanking the members of the club for the feeling which prompted them to give him this present. Mr. Connal said that few knew how much work Mr. Ferguson had done in connection with the club this winter and referred to the praise of the Scottish curlers for Mr. Ferguson and his arrangements to receive and entertain them.

"ANGUS" GOT HIS

The presentation of five, five dollar gold pieces to Mr. McIntosh, who looks after the rink in the curling season was performed on behalf of the Club, by Mr. Brightman, who characterized Mr. McIntosh as the best ice maker in Ontario. Mr. McIntosh had a difficult position to fill, in that he must please the large number of local and outside curlers, and yet never once had anyone been dissatisfied or dissapointed with any of the work looked after by him. Mr. McIntosh, he thought, was the right man in the right place. In presenting the mark of appreciation, Mr. Brightman said, "that is the most pleasing duty that I have ever performed—and I think the most worthy." Mr. McIntosh replied that he did not know that he deserved the gift, but he had always tried to do his best. He had been associated with the curling rink for 23 years, and never once had he had an altercation with a member of the club. He thanked the club heartily for the present.

Mr. J. H. Connal praised Mr. McIntosh for his generosity in coaching and advising young curlers. Mr. J.S. Knapman told of how he had heard Mr. McIntosh's praises sung in Cobourg, Lindsay and Napanee.

In Mr. McIntosh's honor they sang "He's a daisy," and "He's a jolly good fellow and gave him a half a dozen hearty cheers. Everyone was obviously anxious to express their gratitude for Mr. McIntosh's efforts.

The evening was brought to a close by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

SUPERINTENDENCY OF CANAL MAY BE PUT UNDER ENGINEER

No Doubt That Government Will Bear its Share of Cost of New Bridge.

Mr. W. A. Bowden, chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, visited Peterborough yesterday and inspected the Rogers dam, the end of which went out early in January, the wharf at Spaulding's Bay, and the wall at the locks, which has caved out, and which had to be taken down. This is a concrete stretch of fifty feet at the approach of the lock. The dam and the lock were the work of the old Government employes, while the wharf at Spaulding's Bay was undertaken under the superintendency of Mr. Wade and Superintendent J. H. McClellan, of the Trent Canal. The damage to the wharf from high water will not exceed $40 and will be quickly repaired. The dam will cost about $3,000 to repair and the wall at the locks several hundred dollars.

WATER CONSERVATION.

Mr Bowden and Mr. Burnham met the Central Ontario Power Users' Association, represented by Messrs. W. H. Denham, E. G. Patterson, Davidson Dinand and J. H. Munro. A very satisfactory discussion of water conservation in the Trent basin above Peterborough was held, and the chief engineer will put a new man, independent of all interests, as engineer to see that every drop of water is held back, and that no sluices are left open through neglect.

THE NEW BRIDGE.

Mr. Burnham and Mr. Bowden met the Mayor and the city clerk and the city solicitor respecting the proposed new bridge over Hunter street. Before Mr. Bowden would give a satisfactory answer as to what part the Government would take, he asked the city to decide on what they wanted, a high level bridge or an ordinary bridge with a swing. There is no doubt the Government will bare its share of the expense. Mr. Bowden looked at the water front and understands exactly Peterborough's requirements. He also visited Nassau, which will need a new dam in the near future. It is probable that the superintendency of the canal will be put under an engineer since the work of building dams and walls and so forth, cannot be attended to, except by a skilled man with the satisfaction that is always desired. This is exemplified by what occurred at the Rogers dam, which should have been driven into the bank, but was only brought up against the bank, the water, therefore, getting in around the end.

CELEBRATION OF ST. GEORGE'S DAY

Preparations are under way to celebrate St. George's Day, on April 23rd, by a sumptuous spread, in the evening, followed by a patriotic toast list, to be held in Coleman's parlors. Ald. The following is the toast list:

NO. 6 CO. DANCE

A gay assemblage of about fifty couples enjoyed themselves immensely last evening at the military dance in the armories' band hall, given by Captain A. P. McLean's company of the 57th Regiment. The dance was for the non-commissioned officers and men, but the function was graced by the presence of Colonel Clegg, and some of the other officers. Perfect music was supplied by the Opera House orchestra. Flags predominated in the decoration of the hall. Refreshments were not omitted, and everyone present was enthusiastic in praise of the affair.

Beware of a woman who always agrees with you. She doesn't.

PROMISES A FAIR DEAL

HECTOR CHAUVIN INVESTIGATING PARTIZANSHIP CHARGES.

Well-Known Hull Lawyer Is the Commissioner Who Is Looking Into the Behavior of Ottawa Civil Servants In the Recent Elections—Is a Graduate of Laval and Has a Wide Circle of Friends.

Hector Chauvin, of Hull, the well-known barrister, has been appointed a commissioner by the Federal Cabinet to try those employes of the Government in Ottawa who have been charged with political partizanship. After the last Federal election a great number of charges were laid against certain employes, in particular of the Public Works Department, and some were dismissed, but the Minister of Public Works, F. D. Monk, decided to give the accused an opportunity to defend themselves and engage counsel for that purpose if they see fit. Under the revised statutes he appointed Hector Chauvin as commissioner to try the parties accused and evidence is now being taken and the sessions of the commission are being held on the third floor of the Rosenthall building. The commissioner appointed by the Federal authorities is one of the ablest lawyers of Hull and a very highly esteemed citizen of that place and is a member of the well-known legal firm of Brooks & Cauvin.

He is a graduate of the law department of Laval University, Montreal. The firm, although only some nine years in existence, is a very important one and does a big business in the Hull courts. The commissioner is admitted to be a man of judicial mind, fair and impartial and every one that appears before him is promised a fair chance to prove his innocence and will get a square deal.

Saber-Toothed Tiger.

The saber-toothed tiger, long since extinct, was in some respects the most highly organized of the cat family. The word "saber-toothed" explains itself and alludes to the tremendous development of the canine teeth of the upper jaw, which were compressed, sharp-edged and blade-like. Projecting in some species as much as six inches below the gum, these constituted the most formidable stabbing instruments known to the cat tribe. Only in a very general sense can the term "tiger" be applied to this great cat, as a means of indicating its equality in size and strength to that well-known species. Otherwise they are not at all alike.

Judging from the skeleton remains that have been found, the saber-toothed tiger was a short-tailed, heavily-built beast, with massive forequarters, suggesting very limited leaping powers and little speed in running. The immense fangs and the muscular development required to give force to their stroke affected the shape of the head in a singular way. The space between the ear and the eye is very short. A chin much larger than usual in the cat family is also noticeable.

Although these singular animals finally become extinct through the change of ages in the strenuous growth of the world, they managed to exist for a long period, and were widely scattered over the earth. Remains of many species have been discovered in England and other parts of Europe, as well as in India.

Artist and His Paintings.

Lord Alverstone, when speaking the other day at the "coming of age" meeting of the Royal Society of Portrait Painters, declared that the pleasure of being painted by an eminent artist was not unalloyed. He himself had sat to his friend, Mr. John Collier, and not long ago another friend, looking at the portrait, said, "I dare say now you would like to be as wise as Collier has made you look?" "I should," said the Lord Chief Justice. "It's impossible," said the friend.

This recalls the story about Mr. Collier's portrait of his father-in-law, the famous Prof. Huxley, who always took a special pleasure in going to the Royal Academy banquet. But he confessed that in 1883 he found the banquet rather trying, because Mr. Collier's portrait of him, which was in the Academy that year, was hanging just behind him. "Somebody," said Huxley, "remarked that it was a better likeness of me than I was—and really if you try to think that out it's rather confusing."

To Help Caddies.

Fifty members of golf clubs were present at the first meeting in London of the Caddies' Aid Association, an organization formed for the purpose of improving the condition of caddies. Plans for employing caddies at fixed weekly wages and teaching them useful trades were discussed at the meeting.

ATTENDANCES AT BALL GAMES IN BIG LEAGUES

The official attendance figures of the major leagues for 1911 have not yet been made public, but the figures of 1910 will serve to show by comparison how rapidly attendances have increased in eight years.

The total American league attendance in 1902 was 2,206,456, and in 1910, 3,856,837; in the National league in 1902, the attendance was 1,639,002, and in 1910, 3,629,380. These figures mean an increase in the American league of 1,650,380. Something like 2,000,000 increase in each league in eight years is striking evidence of the spread of popularity of the national game.

On the whole the increase has been annual, but there have been years in which the total was slightly surpassed by that of the year just preceding. Such vagaries are due to local conditions, mostly the showing of the home team in some city or another; but the growth has gone steadily forward.

Take individual cases. The largest single total in the American league in 1902 was 420,087 in Philadelphia, and in the National league, 302,875 in New York. Compare these with the 1910 figures. The banner American league attendance in 1910 was in Boston, 740,250; in the National league in Chicago, 730,960. The Polo grounds in 1910 drew 528,000, over twice as many as in 1902.

Even the smallest drawing cities show an increase. The Philadelphia National League grounds in 1910 drew 112,066, whereas the Boston National league grounds in 1910 drew 181,972. The smallest American league attendance in 1910 was in St. Louis, 248,600, whereas the Baltimore home attendance in 1902 was only 174,606. Milwaukee jumped from about 90,000 in 1902 to over 240,000.

SPORT TALK

Developments yesterday made it more likely that there will be no Tri-State League games played in Reading this year as building inspector Grove has condemned the granstand and bleachers at Lauer's Park, and will not allow any crowds to assemble. As it will cost from $5000 to $6000 to make improvements, it can be said positively this will not be done.

Manager Templin states that flowers blooming in Reading, and although that it rained yesterday, the weather is ideal and he hopes that the snow has vanished in Peterborough.

Manager Groom, of the United States League, has extended Templin the courtesy to work out his players next week on the Circus Maximus grounds. This is one of the best ball grounds in the minor leagues, and will be a great benefit to Manager Templin's players.

He has received satisfactory terms from Pitcher Mooney, of the Interstate League, and will be in Peterborough, when he hears from two other players that he has been trying to sign.

Manager Templin recently met one of his old friends, Groom by name, and both were given a pleasant surprise. Templin and Groom played together in the New England League for several years and were on the same club for two seasons. This year both will start the season as managers, and they are pulling for each other to make good.

WRESTLING

Although there are many winning holds in wrestling, Frank Gotch, world's heavyweight champion, knows the names of only six of them. The champion knows how to apply the locks, but does not know the technical terms of one-fifth of the holds which have resulted in the defeat of so many challengers.

Gotch is known to wrestling as the originator of the toe hold, but the big champion says he seldom uses it to throw an opponent. He asserts the hold is more of a footlock than a toe hold, and he uses it to trick opponents into positions where he can clamp on other deadly holds. Gotch's favorite grip is a half-nelson and crotch hold. He claims he beat

FRANK GOTCH

Mahmout in their last meeting by the use of this grip, and by the same means beat Zbysko in 1910, at the Chicago Coliseum, in the second fall of their match.

"I don't believe half the professional wrestlers know the technical terms of half the holds," Gotch said. "I think I can name about six of the locks, but there is such a difference of opinion as to the names of the holds that I never have tried to be an authority on the holds employed by myself or other wrestlers."

"As soon as some logical opponent is developed I will meet him, but I do not intend to meet these foreigners who come over here every year after my title. As soon as any of them get good enough to warrant a match I will be only too glad to sign. I do not need the money, as I have made enough to live comfortably the rest of my life."

"I never hesitated to meet any man in the world, however, when the public demanded my appearance."

An Orange proposal for an anti-home rule demonstration in Dublin has been vetoed by the leaders.

LORDS OF THE MANOR.

They Were Once All-Powerful In England.

Rural England is studded liberally with manor houses. Almost every village owns one, either a genuine antique, or a more or less modern imitation. Better still, many villages possess a real, live lord or lady of the manor.

Lords of the manor have been ruthlessly shorn by the march of our social system, but some of their former glory still remains. Little more than a dozen miles from Charing Cross one rural ruler holds his court leet to this very day—a gathering of his tenants, at which rents are paid and business of the estate discussed.

The history of the manor is to a great extent that of England. Centuries ago, it was divided up among the victorious generals of conquering armies. They themselves sub-divided it among their soldiers. Under this systems the serfs followed petty lords, guaranteeing military service for the use of the land; the lords were responsible to the earls and the earls to the King. The petty chiefs were the lords of the manor.

In the days of William the Conqueror there were no fewer than 1,432 manors in England, and, as Byron puts it in "Don Juan" "Eight and forty manors were their reward for following Billy's banners." No fresh manors were created after the year 1289, however, except in rare instances, such as when the nation presented a victorious general with an estate. This happened in the case of the Duke of Wellington, and to this day a condition of the Manor of Strathfieldsaye is that its owner offers the King a flag once a year.

Curious and often whimsical were the terms under which the majority of lords of the manor held their rights. For example, one manorial monarch undertook that whenever the King should cross a certain bridge he would meet him there with two white capons, and address him thus: "Behold, my lord, these two white capons, which you shall have another time, but not now."

Another lord was bound to appear before the King every Christmas Day, and in his presence to dance a jig and puff out his cheeks. Yet another had to present His Majesty annually with a lance, from which a fox's tail depended. Indeed, weapons were very popular as tokens of the Sovereign's rights, and swords, spurs and warlike accoutrements were frequently chosen.

The tenants of the majority of manors are copyholders; that is to say, they hold the land for life from the lord of the manor. When they die, or transfer the land, a heriot must be paid. This is in the nature of a fine, usually consisting of the best "quick-beast" — horse or cow — but sometimes commuted to a sum of money.

Considerably under a hundred years ago copyholders of land possessed no vote. The lord of the manor, princely in his petty powers, ruled all within his leet. The leet kept the stocks in repair, and provided the pillory and tumbrell—the latter a ducking stool, by means of which misdemeanants were immersed; women in clean water; brewers and bakers in the filthiest liquid that could be found.

The Manor of Pewsey, in Wiltshire, was conveyanced by means of a horn that had to be blown at the accession of a new lord, and every year the City of London pays certain horseshoes and nails as rent for a piece of land in the parish of St. Clement Dane.

Nowadays, lords of the manor are a dying class. It requires two copyholders at least to form a manor, and many modern "serfs" have their land made freehold by buying out the overlord.

Ostrich Chases M.P.

While sightseeing outside Ladysmith, during his tour in South Africa, Sir Joseph Walton, M.P. for Barnsley, Eng., had an exciting adventure. He noticed that he was being pursued by a cock ostrich. This, it appears, was the same bird which had previously knocked down two officers, who were compelled to lie down on their faces while the bird stood or jumped on them.

"Knowing that my only chance of escape," says Sir Joseph, "was to lie down flat on my face, or get on an elevation, I made quickly for the laager (thrown up during the siege), and mounted the wall. I went round the walls of the laager, hoping to shake him off, but he followed steadily yard by yard, awaiting his opportunity.

"At last I signalled to my carriage, and when it was between me and the ostrich I leaped off the laager and bolted into the carriage. We drove off, followed a long way by the bird."

Women on the English Stage.

Pepys went to the Clare Market Theatre on Jan. 3, 1661, say "The Beggar's Bush" well performed and records "the first time that I ever saw women come upon the stage." Previously all female parts had been taken by boys or young men. The change was probably suggested by Charles II. from his continental experience and arose from an amusing episode. The King had gone to the theatre "before his time," and, finding the actors not ready, asked for an explanation, whereupon he was gravely informed that the queen has not shaved yet!" As the merry monarch loved to laugh at a jest as well as to make one, the excuse was accepted and a reform initiated.—Westminster Gazette.

Dickens Spared Not His Pen.

With so many demands upon his pen one would expect to find Dickens availing himself of all possible brevities in his correspondence at least. But a glance through his letters shows that he scorned all such opportunities and preferred to spell everything out. The date of the months, for example, are given in words instead of figures. "Monday," sixteenth January"; Tuesday, seventh March"; "Wednesday, twelfth April"; "twenty-sixth May," "Friday evening, nineteenth May"—in this way are all his letters dated. He spared not his pen.

ket; as well as vast business enterprises in the United States and England:

Foremost among the passengers in point of wealth was John Jacob Astor, who was returning to New York with his bride, formerly Miss Madeleine Force. Col. Astor's holding amount to fully $150,000,000, and he is connected with nearly a score of corporations. Next in financial importance come Benjamin Guggenheim, Alfred G. Vanderbilt and George D. Widener. Guggenheim represents American Smelting Securities Co., a great mining corporation. He is a member of a number of corporations.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt has never taken an active part in business affairs of the Vanderbilt family, having left that to his brother, Cornelius. Alfred is a member of numerous corporations, and his fortune is estimated at $75,000,000.

George D. Widener is connected with the Traction Syndicate of Philadelphia. His fortune is estimated at $50,000,000.

Col. Washington Roebling, builder of the Brooklyn Bridge, and director of John A. Roebling Sons Co. His fortune amounts to $25,000,000.

Bruce Ismay is probably worth $50,000,000. If the fortunes of all the first-class passengers were placed together they would make easily one billion dollars.

Notable persons, travelers on the Titanic, whose fate was in doubt in the lack of definite advices as to the identity of the survivors were Major Archibald Butt, aide to President Taft; Charles M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Pacific, his wife and daughter; W. T. Stead, F. D. Miller, the artist, Mr. and Mrs. Isidor Straus, Henry B. Harris, the theatrical manager, and Mrs. Harris, and Col. Washington Roebling, builder of the Brooklyn Bridge.

Running Rights Over Intercolonial.

Ottawa, April 16.—It is understood that negotiations have been renewed between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government looking to the securing of running rights for C.P.R. trains over the Intercolonial Railway between St. John and Halifax. It is probable that an agreement will be reached and that the Intercolonial will be double-tracked from Moncton to Halifax.

The growth and development of the west, also suggests the desirability of extending the Intercolonial to Georgian Bay. Certain companies seeking subsidies have proposed to build a line over which the I.C.R. would be given running rights.

INDIA'S MAHARAJAHS

NATIVE PRINCES HAVE GREAT POWER IN PROVINCES.

Their Position Is More Important Than That of European Nobles for Each Is a Monarch In His Own Right—There Are No Less Than Six Hundred Ruling Houses Headed by the Great Nizam.

At this moment, when all that is splendid in Anglo-Indian majesty has recently been gathered in one great Eastern dependency, and weird and wonderful names, the significance of which is generally lost in this country, are appearing in the newspapers, it is appropriate that a brief space should be devoted to a succinct explanation of the position occupied by the great chiefs who assembled in the capital of Aurungzeb to do homage at the coronation of their feudal King-Emperor.

So many misconceptions are entertained by the public about the potentates of India that the present is the right moment for making their position clear. Anything like a biographical description of the Indian chiefs is, of course, impossible here, but there are certain notable points in relation to the Indian royalties which may profitably be noted.

To define the individual significance of each titular style among the Rajahs of India would be a useless task, for it is almost incapable of explanation to readers unacquainted with India. The best explanation is that given by Whitaker's Peerage, but its right to be accepted as an authority may be gauged by the statements that "Maharajah, Raja, and Nawab correspond with English peers."

A more erroneous conception of the relative position of the Indian princes it is impossible to conceive. But it explains the difficulty of dogmatizing upon Indian royalty, even when well-known Anglo-Indian gentlemen are asked to co-operate in arriving at conclusions. But in a simple form we will endeavor to put the status of the various high dignitaries of India clearly before the reader.

The Indian "Debrett," if there were such a compilation, would contain the family details of no less than six hundred ruling houses. The chief of these is the young Nizam of Hyderabad, whose coronation took place, with an immense display of feudal magnificence, last May. He is the actual ruler of a country bigger than Britain, with powers of life and death over millions of subjects.

To describe the Nizam as corresponding to a British peer is as ridiculous a statement as could well be made. The Nazim's position is so curious that he might be given a separate article. Next to the ruler of Hyderabad are the Maharajahs of Baroda, Mysore, and Cashmire. These gentlemen are all kings. In a word, they correspond in India with the German kings in Europe.

Another great Indian prince is the Rao of Kutch, and as he is the Indian potentate with whom the writer is best acquainted, his position can be precisely defined. He is a sovereign monarch, and among those of his subjects who speak English—a very small number, by the way—His Highness is usually referred to as "the King of Kutch." And this is no misnomer.

The Rao-Sahib of Kutch exercises all the attributes of a monarch. He rules with the assurance of a despot. He is an island king, whose country can only be reached by sea for the greater part of the year. The Rann of Kutch, which shuts the country off from the mainland of India, is dry for three months each year, but it can only be crossed by camels, as it is a salt desert.

His Highness has his palace high up on the top of a hill, within the embattled walls of a fortified city. To enter this city one must pass through great gates and over the drawbridges of a splendid lake. In fact, the City of Bhuj, of which probably nine-tenths of those who read these lines have never heard, is a wonderful walled stronghold, capable of housing all the people of Kutch in time of war, and which even to-day would be a hard nut to crack for the soldiers of the King-Emperor, if ever the day came that Britain found herself seriously at loggerheads with the Kutchi sovereign.

A white man is almost a rara avis within the walls of Bhuj, and when the writer drove through the city in one of the Rao-Sahib's carriages, to pay a ceremonial call upon his highness, the natives gazed at their monarch's guest in open-eyed amazement.

The Rao of Kutch rules his country without the assistance of the white man. He has never been conquered by the British. It was at the request of the Rao's ancestor that the British Government sent a Resident to Kutch in 1819, with a regiment of soldiers to manifest his authority.

There is still a Resident in Kutch. He has a charming bungalo at some distance from the town, but he loves to escape down to Bombay and feel that he is in the land of the living. For a Resident is almost an anomaly in Kutch. He has to be very careful not to interfere with the rulership of the Rao-Sahib. All he is there for is to see that the Kutchi monarch does not make war on any neighboring state. So long as the Rao is content to rule his own country, the services of the Resident are rendered a sinecure.

The Rao is the descendant of a long line of great Rajput warriors—bloodthirsty fellows at their best. But in India might has always been right and the same applies to every other Indian state. The Rao has his own army. He has beneath him a great feudal nobility, all of them rulers of their own states, who, in time of war, would send their liege lord the Rao-Sahib, their quota of men for the defence of their island country.

Neglect is responsible for most Watches going wrong. A Watch should be thoroughly overhauled, at least once a year. An Interesting Subject for Royal Astronomical Society

The meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society on Monday evening April 22, at the Collegiate Institute, is not only for the members of the Society. The general public is most cordially invited. Admission free.

Mars will be the subject of the evening. This planet is perhaps the only world, in addition to the earth, in the solar system where life, as we are acquainted with it, is possible.

Its formation, development and present condition will be discussed.

What will be the end of the planets including the earth from a scientific point of view?

SYLVIA WAS PRESENTED TO LARGE AUDIENCE

Pleasing Presentation Under Auspices of St. Peter's Sodality

St. Peter's Sodality presented "Sylvia" at the Grand last evening in aid of the T. A. S. building fund, and a large crowd took the opportunity to see some of Peterboro's local talent.

The plot of the play was that Sylvia and Betty were discontented with their respective lots, and agreed to exchange sweethearts and gowns for the afternoon. With the aid of a magic flower this was accomplished and Betty strolled through the woods with Sir Bertram de Lacey, the court poet, and Sylvia spent the afternoon with William, an honest farmer. Both girls soon discovered the thorns among the roses and running away from their new sweethearts regained their own lovers and costumes, and resolved to be contented with their station in life. Prince Tobbytum, a court dandy hearing tales of de Lacey and Sylvia endevored to make trouble, but his endeavors were frustrated and Sylvia and Betty part the best of friends, both content to remain a court lady and a farmer's daughter respectively.

The title role was taken by Miss Verna Devlin while Mr. Harold Lee was seen as Sir Bertram de Lacey. Miss Josephine Delaire as Betty and Mr. Bert New, as William. These ladies and gentlemen played the leading roles and the great success of the play is attributed to their brilliant work.

Mr. Ed. Hanrahan as Prince Tobbytum made a great hit with the crowd by singing "A Man of Consequence" and received great applause.

The show was concluded by the entire company singing "See the Harvest Moon is Shining" and the large audience was well pleased with the manner in which the young people acquitted themselves.

The experienced hand of Mr. Geo. Lynch was responsible for the stage management, while Miss L. Hurley, was musical directress. Much credit too, is due to Miss S. A. Kelly, who managed the affair.

Afterwards the company was entertained at Hooper's.

C. G. E. BOYS GAVE SEND OFF

Last night in the Dominion Chinese Cafe a number of friends and fellow employees of Mr. F. S. Milliken of the Canadian General Electric Works, gave him a farewell banquet.

Mr. Milliken, who has been employed in the brass department of the C.G.E., left to-day for Calgary, where he will stay a short time before leaving for his ultimate destination, Edmonton.

At the banquet last night many hearty wishes for his success were expressed by his friends.

OFFICE STAFF SAID FAREWELL

In the parlors of Coleman's confectionary store Saturday night, the office staff of the local Quaker Oats Company to the number of twenty, gave an informal farewell banquet to Mr. Ira Moore, who is leaving for Toronto where he will be in charge of the Toronto sales office. The affair was a very enjoyable one and those present conveyed in several short speeches their regret at Mr. Moore's departure.

REEVE HOWDEN BUYS SOME PROPERTY AND MONAGHAN'S BOARD OF HEALTH FORGETS

City Property Committee Finds Land Proposed for Garbage Dump is off the Market—D. M. Minicolo Offers Another Plot for $3,300.

The consultation which was to have taken place last night between the North Monaghan Board of Health and the City Property Committee did not materialize. The blame, however, rested entirely upon the former, as Reeve Howden, of North Monaghan, promised faithfully last Friday evening to have their Board of Health meet the Property Committee and discuss the question of a more suitable place for dumping the refuse of the city than the section chosen by the committee near Crawford's Grove.

This suggestion was made by Reeve Howden himself and the Property Committee willingly gave their consent.

PROPERTY PURCHASED.

It was apparent, however, that Reeve Howden never intended that the city should acquire the lot on which the property Committee secured an option. It came to light that Mr. Howden had arranged for the purchase of the Jackson lot, thereby excluding the possibility of the city securing it. The Property Committees's option on the site was only good up to twelve o'clock last night, consequently the committee decided to abandon the idea of purchasing it, out of consideration for the North Monaghan ratepayers, who waited on the Council to protest last Friday evening.

DEPUTATION OF ONE.

Only Mr. Carver, of the North Monaghan Council, was present, he himself considering that North Monaghan's attitude in the matter had not been strictly businesslike. No notice of any description was given to Ald. Duncan that the township Board of Health would not be on hand.

ANOTHER SITE.

Mr. D. M. Minicolo, however, came to the rescue by offering by letter two lots owned by him, a little further down, in North Monaghan. The lots are Nos. 29 and 30, in Lot 11, concession 11, which he offered for $3,300 in all, or Lot 29 alone, for $1,700.00. Both are ten acre lots, less the area taken up by the G.T.R. sidings.

A house is on Lot 29, hence the disproportionate cost. The city will only consider the purchase of one lot.

On motion of Ald. Morgan and Brown, the chairman will look into the suitability of the Minicolo property as a dumping ground and report back to the committee.

Those present were Ald. Duncan (chairman) Ald. Morgan, Brown, Graham, and Solicitor E. H. D. Hall.

OTHER BUSINESS.

An application from Thomas Hopkins, 200 Murray street, for the position of caretaker of King Edward Park, was received by the Property Committee last night, the appointment, however, being left till a later date.

Mr. John Best, a dealer in nursery stock, offered to supply some sugar maple stock for King Edward Park. As the contract had previously been let for trees for the park, Ald. Duncan stated that no more were needed. The chairman seized the occasion to administer a rebuke to Mr. Best for the poor class of trees he supplied the Public Library grounds. If trees are required at the Queen Mary Hospital, Mr. Best was informed that he might be given an order.

MR. JOHN CRANE RESIGNS FROM ST. PAULS CHURCH CHOIR

Occasionally we come across a citizen who enters on some duty or service of a public character and retains the office and function because he takes a real interest in the work and not because of any honorarium or salary connected with the position. Running through our civic interests and in our churches and societies are men who are doing a real service, but who make no claim to consideration. It is only when they cease to excercise these functions that attention has been called to what they have been accomplishing, often in the most quiet and unostentatious way.

Such is the case with the service of Mr. John Crane has been giving St. Paul's church, where he has been leader and choir director for the last nineteen years. During all that period this arm of the church service has gone along smoothly and efficiently, drawing commendation and approval from the members of the church and from the other organizations as well.

Mr. Crane has sent in to the Board of Managers his resignation, feeling that after the long term of service he might well be relieved of the duties. That the Board will regret Mr. Crane's withdrawal is a sure thing. Any church committee that has been relieved of all care and anxiety and bother for so long a period, will view with some anxiety a change. Choirs are, for some reason, hard to manage. It is all volunteer effort. Volunteer effort may be, and is often, enthusiastic and often misplaced. Mr. Crane has had the happy faculty of keeping his choir together, of diverting their effort in a way of efficiency and producing results gratifying to the congregation and a credit to himself and the personnel of the choir.

It is understood that the Board of Managers will take steps to find a successor to Mr. Crane. Observe, not to fill Mr. Crane's place. They will deal with the professional musician, who may be earnest and able, but who will never develop the spirit of loyalty to St. Paul's, anxiety for efficiency in the musical service that has characterized Mr. Crane's incumbency for nineteen years.

BENNETT V. HAVELOCK IN COURT OF APPEAL

Application Made on Behalf of Plaintiffs for Special Leave to Carry Case Again Before the Supreme Court, Dismissed.

Toronto, April 15.—Bennett & Nolan vs Havelock Light and Power Co., Limited and others. M. Lockhart Gordon for plaintiffs and S. T. Medd for defendants.

The last act in this well known case took place before the five judges of the Court of Appeal for Ontario at Osgoode Hall to-day, Sir Charles Moss presiding, when the court dismissed with costs the application made to it on behalf of the plaintiffs for special leave to carry the case again before the Supreme Court at Ottawa.

Three years ago several shareholders of the Light and Power Company started an action against the company itself, and against the five original directors of the company, claiming that 200 shares of the company's capital stock had been issued to the five original directors for nothing, and asking that those shares be cancelled or paid for. Four of the directors claimed they had paid in full for those shares, the company submitted its position to the court's direction. The trial took up three days of the time of the High Court of Justice at the Assize, judgment was reserved and sometime after handed out dismissing the case but without costs.

The plaintiffs then appealed to a Divisional Court of the High Court at Osgoode Hall, and that court, after a two days hearing, reversed the judgment of the trial judge, and ordered each of the four directors to pay $1000 and all expenses and costs of the litigation.

Negotiations for a settlement were then taken up by the interested parties and their friends, and the directors hoping for a settlement finally decided to abandon further opposition to the plaintiffs' demands and arrange to meet them on any fair basis of compromise.

Some months later, and long after the time for an appeal had expired the plaintiffs again brought the case before the Divisional Court claiming additional relief which was granted at the same time, the directors who now realized that their hope of any reasonable settlement, would not be considered by the plaintiffs, asked their solicitors to endeavor to get leave to go on with their abandoned appeal, and that was obtained.

The case came on before the Court of Appeal for Ontario in October last, and that Court after hearing the whole case fully presented and argued, reserved its judgment, which was later handed down reversing with costs the judgment of the Divisional Court and fully vindicating the original directors and absolutely clearing them of the charges of fraud, misrepresentation, concealment and conspiracy with which they had been charged by the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs then appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada at Ottawa, and the defendants at once applied to that Court for an order prohibiting this appeal, claiming that the law governing the Supreme Court gave no authority to that Court to hear the appeal. The Supreme Court heard counsel for both sides and reserved its decision, and finally decided it had no power as the case stood to hear the plaintiff's appeal.

The plaintiffs as a last resort today made application to the Court of Appeal at Osgoode Hall for special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court on the ground that as the questions of law involved in the case were questions of general public interest, questions that were applicable to the whole Dominion, and as to which there was a conflict as to what the law really was, there should be an opportunity given the plaintiffs to have their rights tried out in the highest tribunal in the land, but this leave was refused, the Court in giving judgment stating that if there was a doubt as to what the law was, it had better be settled at the expense of some one other than these directors whose acts and deeds had been fully vindicated by their counsel in this Court in October last; and brought within well conceived principles of law, that the Supreme Court had apparently given consideration to the matter in February last, and that these directors should not be put to the expense and trouble of litigating these questions farther, as far as they were concerned.

A boat, into which the passengers of the British steamer Seang Chun were disembarking, capsized at Amoy China, and 40 persons, mostly women were drowned.

APPOINTED JUDGE IN COURT OF APPEAL FOR MANITOBA

Many of the old residents of Peterborough will remember Mr. Alex. Haggart, who was born and lived for some years in this city. Mr. Haggart has just been appointed Judge in the Court of Appeal for Manitoba, and the Winnipeg Tribune has the following reference to Judge Haggart:

The Court of Appeal is the highest court in the province, and is presided over by Chief Justice Howell. Mr. Haggart will fill the additional judgeship created by the provincial legislature, owing to the great pressure of legal business in the courts here. The court, as constituted now, consists of Chief Justice Howell and Judges Richards, Perdue, Cameron and Haggart.

Mr. Haggart, who has just been appointed a Justice of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba, is one of the best known lawyers in Winnipeg.

He was born in Peterborough, Ont., in 1848, so that he is now 63 years old. He has served in Winnipeg both as school trustee and alderman. In 1908 he was elected as Conservative candidate in the Dominion election, and he defeated the present Lieutenant-Governor, D. C. Cameron.

On September 21st of last year Winnipeg re-elected him by a big majority. He quickly resigned to give his seat to Hon. Robert Rogers, whom Mr. Borden desired to include in his cabinet, Mr. Haggart accepting office as postmaster at Crewe.

Mrs. Alex. Gibson, of this city, is a niece of Judge Haggart.

Doctors Use This for Eczema

Dr. Evans, Ex-Commissioner of Health, says: "There is almost no relation between skin diseases and the blood." The skin must be cured through the skin. The germs must be washed out, and so salves have long ago been found worthless. The most advanced physicians of this country are now agreed on this, and are prescribing a wash of wintergreen, thymol and other ingredients for eczema and all other skin diseases. This compound is known as D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

Dr. Holmes, the well-known skin specialist writes: "I am convinced that the D. D. D. Prescription is as much a specific for eczema as quinine for malaria. We have been prescribing the D.D.D. remedy for years."

We ourselves vouch for the D.D.D. Prescription for eczema and absolutely believe that it will take away the itch the instant you apply it.

Of course other druggists have D.D.D. Prescription. Go to them if you cannot come to us, but don't accept some big profit substitute.

But if you are suffering from any form of skin trouble we would like to have you come to our store for we have had the agency of this remedy for so many years that we can tell you all about D.D.D. Prescription and how it cures eczema. Or you can get a free trial bottle by writing the D.D.D. Laboratories, 49 Colborne street, Toronto; McDermid & Jury, or E. L. Payne, druggists.

WEDDING AT OSHKIGMONG

Miss Madie Johnson and Mr. Herb. Irons Are Married

Special Correspondence.

Oshkigmong, April 16.—A very unique wedding took place here on Easter Monday, when Mr. Herbert Irons took advantage of the bissextile and secured for his own Miss Madie, daughter of Mr. George Johnson, both of Chemong.

The wedding feast was held in the town hall, when all the people, rich and poor, young and old, were invited to participate in the feast, which was so substantially provided for them. The guests did not have to be called the second time, and no excuses made, but all flocked to the hall when the trumpet sounded, which announced that the oxen and the fatlings were killed, and all things were ready, all responded to the call. The two young people were both handsomely attired. The room in which the feast was spread was tastefully decorated and mottoes appropriately worded for the occasion and the season hung on the walls. We all extend our good wishes for a prosperous life.

Our visitors from Orillia, Rama, and Longford returned home Wednesday of last week.

Quite a number of our people are laid up with la grippe. Among them is Mrs. John Taylor.

The snow is disappearing fast here and in the vicinity.

Toronto, April 16.—Robert Rogers, a workman, who was employed on the erection of the new building being built by the G. W. Gillett Co., at the corner of Liberty and Fraser streets, fell down the elevator hoist, which he was operating early yesterday afternoon, and was so badly injured that he died shortly afterwards in the Western Hospital. His back was broken and he sustained a severe scalp wounds.

Collided In Harbor.

New York, April 16.—The Grace Line steamer Condor, outbound for Callao, while proceeding down the bay late yesterday afternoon in a dense fog, came into collision with the U. S. battleship Utah and had her bows stove in. The battleship was lying at anchor off Tompkinsville, and the Condor moving slowly, pushed her nose through a fog bank and bumped head-on into the port bow of the sea fighter. The Utah received only slight damage.

The oldest officiating preacher in London is Rev. Robert Brandon, Baptist, who recently celebrated his ninety-fifth birthday anniversary. He has to be carried to his church in a bath chair, for he has been a cripple since he was two years old.

Beans Make Rubber.

It has taken the Germans to use beans for making rubber. The process has just been patented. It consists in extracting a thick oil from the soya bean, treating this with nitric acid, and then heating the material to a given temperature, whereupon it becomes viscid and tough like crude rubber. It can then be vulcanized by the addition of sulphur the same as vegetable rubber, and used for the same purposes.

A TOWER OF ROMANCE.

Canonbury Once the Home of Many Literary Celebrities.

Historic London is rapidly disappearing, but now and then one runs across some relic of the middle ages that still preserves much of its original character. Such a survival is Canonbury Tower, standing in one of the northern suburbs of London. It began life in 1360 as the country residence of the prior of St. Bartholomew. In more recent days it became the home in turn of many literary celebrities. Oliver Goldsmith lived there from 1762 to 1764, though the actual rooms that he occupied are uncertain. It was there he commenced "The Vicar of Wakefield." Another tenant at the same time as Goldsmith was Newberry, the bookseller, and it was in his rooms that the impecunious Oliver often took refuge from his creditors.

In the rooms generally reputed to have been inhabited by Goldsmith lived Washington Irving some time after, a period of his life which he described in his "Tales of a Traveler." Other interesting folk who lived there at different times were Samuel Humphreys, the author of "Ulysses," who died there in 1737; Christopher Smart, the "mad poet"; Dr. Johnson of dictionary fame; William Hone, who wrote "The Everyday Book"; Woodfall, who printed "The Letters of Junius," and Robert Horsfield, one of Pope's booksellers.

Canonbury Tower is now the property of the Marquis of Northampton, and an interesting romance is told of his ancestor through whom it came into his possession. In 1594 it belonged to Sir John Spencer, a Lord Mayor of London. He had a very beautiful daughter, Elizabeth, who was also a rich heiress. She loved and was loved by Lord Compton, but her father refused to sanction the match, so the lover had to resort to strategy. He dressed himself up as a baker's boy, called at the house and eventually left—with his lady love in his basket.

Sir John was furious and refused to see his daughter after the marriage, but a reconciliation was effected about a year after by that most cunning of women, Queen Elizabeth. She invited the angry baronet to become sponsor to an infant, whose mother, she declared, had behaved much as his daughter had. Sir John consented and then announced that he should adopt the son as his own. At this propitious moment the Queen revealed her little plot and the incident closed in the time honored way by the old man "bless-you-my-childering" his son-in-law and erring daughter. It was through this child that the Marquis of Northampton inherited the tower.

Kitchener as Prisoner.

Kitchener's ability in disguising himself has given rise to many stories, true and otherwise, of this famous soldier. The following incident was told by one who served with the Essex Regiment in a campaign against the Dervishes:

"I was acting corporal of the guard over a large number of 'gentlemen of the desert' whom we had taken prisoners. In the course of my rounds a captive within the tent drew my attention, and I was surprised to hear in good English the request:

"'Corporal, I wish to get out of this.'

"I of course reported the occurrence to the sergeant of the guard, only to be met with the curt reply:

"'Let the fool stay where he is.'

"As I passed the spot again the voice from within said:

"'Say, corporal, you are of the Essex Regiment?'

"I answered that I was, and the prisoner said:

"'Well, tell Mr. B—— that I want to speak to him.'

"'What name?' I queried.

"'Kitchener,' came the reply, and I at once reported accordingly to the sergeant.

"He immediately made for the prisoners' quarters, and I shall never forget that meeting.

"The dishevelled 'Dervish' was in reality the Lord Kitchener that was to be, who had been out spying among the enemy, and had apparently been taken prisoner by his own troops."

The Rifle Fish.

Writing to the Travelers' Gazette from Queensland about the strange forms of animal life in that country, which include the web foot duck, which lays eggs and suckles its young, the "lung fish" and the "walking perch," a correspondent gives a description of the rifle fish, which when full grown measures about ten inches and weighs about one and a half pounds. It subsists on food which it shoots—hence the name. It swims leisurely about the stream a few inches below the surface and is always on the look-out for flies and other insects that settle on the floating surface of water plants. On getting close enough to its victim its discharges a tiny jet or ball of water, which, if shot straight, knocks the fly into the stream, where it is instantly gathered in by the shooter.

Fish That Destroy Mosquitoes.

All the pools and swamps in Barbados, West Indies, are stocked with swarms of millions of tiny fishes that feed on the larvae of the mosquito. The health board of Antigua, being convinced that these fish do a valuable missionary work in the consumption of mosquito eggs, some time ago arranged for their systematic distribution throughout the pools and streams of Antigua.

The Jamaicans also have utilized these fish in this way: The tanks of one hotel in Jamaica are full of them, and the secretary of an agricultural society in that island reports that there has been a marked diminution of fever roundabout.

A Romance of Science.

But for the late Sir Joseph Hooker one of the romances of science probably would have been robbed of its color, for it was he who persuaded Darwin to send in his treatise on the origin of species to the historic gathering of the Linnean society so that it might be considered along with that of Alfred Russel Wallace. The exhilarating spectacle was thus presented of two giant minds arriving simultaneously at the same great goal. In the letter conveying his assent Darwin wrote that he sent his sketch of 1844 "solely that you may see by your own handwriting that you did read it. It is miserable in me to care at all about priority."—London Chronicle.

LATEST LIST OF DEAD SAID TO REACH 1505

Names of Those Rescued Does Not Include Chas. M. Hays---Franconia Reports Having 700 of Titanic's Passengers on Board---Carpathian to Dock Friday Morning.

NEW YORK, N.Y., APRIL 17.—A wireless message from a newspaperman on board the Olympic, relayed via Cape Race, says that the Leyland line steamer Californian has recovered several bodies of victims of the Titanic disaster. The Californian is expected to take the bodies to Boston, but her voyage eastward is unknown. Captain Haddock having got in touch with the Carpathian by wireless and learned the details of the disaster, realizing his helplessness, relayed his list of survivors to a shore station.

NEW YORK, N.Y., APRIL 17.—A wireless message to the Cunard offices states that the Carpathian expects to arrive off Sandy Hook Thursday night. She will probably anchor down the bay and come to her dock Friday morning. The White Star Line announced to-day that Washington Dodge, the San Francisco millionaire, who has been reported lost. was safe aboard the Carpathian, with his wife and son.

LONDON, APRIL 17.—The list of survivors of the Titanic disaster as given out by White Star offices to-day, contains the names of both Mr. and Mrs. Jaques Futrelle, of Boston. A previous list published here contained the name of Mrs. Putrelle only. The name of Charles M. Hays does not appear on the list of saved.

BOSTON, MASS., April 17.—The Leyland Line offices here report their liner Californian has started for port after cruising about the scene of the Titanic disaster, but cannot confirm the report that she has on board the bodies of some of the victims.

New York, April 17.—Marconi offices here said to-day they had received a wireless despatch from the Cunard Liner Franconia, saying she had been in communication with the Carpathia, and that the latter vessel had reported as follows; "Have on board seven hundred saved from Titanic. More than two thousand were lost." This report is at variance with any of the other stories received here, and telegraph officials are inclined to believe figures have been misread.

New York, April 16.—If the despatch from the Cunard Liner Franconia proves to be wrong, as it is confidently expected it will, the the estimate that 1312 persons perished when the Titanic sank proves correct. It is thought that among the survivors now aboard the Carpathia are about four hundred steerage passengers, mostly women and children, and about one hundred and forty members of the crew, whose presence would be necessary in the lifeboats.

New York, April 17.—A wireless message received at one-thirty this afternoon says there are only 705 survivors on board the Carpathia. This despatch came from Winfield Thompson, a Boston newspaper man on the Franconia. The Franconia, had wireless communication with the Carpathia at six o'clock this morning. This would make the death list 1,505.

NESBITT IS UNDECIDED AS TO HIS NEXT MOVE

Toronto, April 17.—All the secrecy which for more than a year has cloaked the whereabouts of Dr. Beattie Nesbitt now shrouds the movements and deliberations of the crown with regard to his extradition from Chicago. Yesterday morning Provincial Magistrate Rogers heard the evidence upon the extradition depositions at the Parliament buildings, and this hearing will be completed this morning.

Neither Magistrate Rogers, Inspector of Detectives Duncan nor H. H. Dewart, K.C., counsel for Nesbitt, would make any statement as to what action was being taken by either the forces of the crown or the defence, further than that Mr. Dewart intimated that he might be in a position to make a statement should he be given a view of the crown depositions, but this was not granted and no statement was forthcoming. It is understood, however, that the doctor has by no means given up his original intention of returning to Toronto of his own free will and waiving extradition proceedings.

Mr. Rogers bore out this belief when interviewed on the extradition case last night. He said that Dr. Beattie Nesbitt had not announced whether he would return voluntarily to this country, waiving extradition, but that the doctor and his counsel were considering the matter.

It is understood that to do this he must come back unconditionally and be prepared to face whatever charges have been or may be laid against him. Whether or not there were any further charges laid at yesterday morning's sitting is guarded as a solid secret, but it was said yesterday that other charges would be laid. Magistrate Rogers would not say just what was the amendment to the charge of forgery upon which the arrest was made, but said that the new charge was in respect of the same facts and that the alteration had been technical rather than actual. Crown Attorney Corley was not at the hearing.

W. R. Travers, former general manager of the bank, was examined by Magistrate Rogers, who has brought back a deal of the breeziness of Chicago with him, for he heard the evidence amid the soothing clouds of the smoke from a cigar, which is history in Canadian courts.

The hearing was not completed yesterday.

HAYS STARTED AT SEVENTEEN

Entered the Railway Business and Soon Climbed the Ladder

Toronto, April 17.—It is now feared that Charles Melville Hays, president and general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad, was carried down with the doomed liner Titanic. Mr. Hays has been in England for some time, securing loans to carry on the construction work on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad.

Born in Rock Island, Illinois, on May 16, 1856, Charles Melville Hays showed ambition at the age of 17, and entered the service of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1873. He then became connected with the Missouri Pacific Railway and the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway Co. until October, 1886, when he received the appointment as assistant general manager of the Wabash Western Railway, where he remained until 1895.

In 1895, when offered the position of general manager of the Grand Trunk Co. of Canada, at Montreal, he resigned from the Wabash Railroad. Shortly afterwards in 1897, he was instrumental in the reorganization of the Central Vermont Railway Co., a subsidiary of the G.T.R., and was elected president.

When Collis P. Huntington, president of the Southern Pacific Co. and steamship lines, controlling over 10,000 miles, died, Mr. Hays was chosen as his successor, and in 1901 he assumed charge of this company, but resigned in the latter part of the year, and was recalled by the English directors to take control of the G.T.R., which he did in 1902, as second vice-president and general manager.

In this year Mr. Hays had the inspiration to organize the Grand Trunk Pacific, and with the assistance of the Government this ambition was realized, and he was elected president. On Jan. 1, 1910, he was made president and a member of the board of directors of the Grand Trunk Railway Co. In addition to these two lines, Mr. Hays was president of all the subsidiaries of these roads, including the Central Vermont, Grand Trunk Western, Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee, and of many other smaller railroads operating over 1,500 miles of tracks on these lines alone.

Mr. Hays was also president of the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Co., having some 1,500 to 2,000 miles of track in the northwest, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

From a clerk sitting in the office of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Co., Charles Melville Hays appeared to be impelled by some unseen power until he eventually became one of the greatest railroad men in the world. His career, to say the least, was checkered and there seemed to be no obstacle too large for him to conquer.

It is said that he refused a knighthood in 1910. His wife is the daughter of William A. Gregg, of St. Louis, Mo.

True Bills Returned.

Woodstock, April 17.—At 5 o'clock last evening, the grand jury at the local assizes which opened before Chancellor Boyd yesterday morning, brought in true bills against George Patterson and Warren Dennis, the two East Zorra farmers who are charged with setting fire to the barn of George Patterson on Oct. 19 last. Patterson and Dennis pleaded not guilty.

Accidental Death the Verdict.

Parry Sound, April 17.—"Accidental death" was the verdict of Coroner Dr. Mason, who yesterday enquired into the circumstances connected with the death of John Tennant of Ambo, whose body some boys found floating in the harbor here on Sunday evening.

Veteran Engineer Dead.

Belleville, April 17.—Wm. Mair, the second oldest G.T.R. engineer in this city, died suddenly Monday night from heart trouble. In 1872, he came to this city, and since had been an engineer.

MAJORITY IS NINETY-FOUR

London, April 17.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—In the course of the debate on the home rule bill, which passed its first reading by a majority of 94, T. P. O'Connor said they never heard of persecution in south and west Ireland, where the Protestants were in a minority. If Catholics were disposed to persecute Protestants, would not the persecution be in parts where Protestants were in a minority? (Ministerial cheers.)

"All this charge of religious persecution was one of the emptiest, meanest and one of the most lying calumnies ever heard." (Ministerial and Nationalist cheers.) "The main case was the Ulster case, that Protestants could be trusted."

Tim Healy said that, as for Ulstermen declaring that there would be oppression, he asked them to condescend to give particulars. (Ministerial cheers.)

Wouldn't Pay Bridge Toll.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 17.—Refusing to pay bridge toll, because his uncle, a prominent St. Catharines financier-physician owned the majority of the lower bridge company stock a man giving his name as Merritt, was arrested at four o'clock yesterday morning. He was accompanied by Alice Hart to the American side. He was sent to St. Catharines, while the woman was deported.

W. T. STEAD ONE OF WORLD'S FOREMOST JOURNALISTS

Celebrated Englishman Who Was Among the Passengers on the Ill-Fated Titanic Became Famous When He Started the Anti-White Slave Agitation Thirty Years Ago—Spiritualistic Opinions Well Known

London, April 17.—William Thomas Stead, who probably perished in the Titanic disaster, was one of the best known of cosmopolitan British journalists, was born at Embleton, in the County of Northumberland England, on July 5, 1859. His father was a Congregational minister, and all through his journalistic life he bore the impress of his nonconformist training. Originally destined to a mercantile life, he early displayed a strong bent to journalism, and at 22 became editor of The Northern Echo, published in Darlington. From thence he emerged in London newspaper life as assistant editor of The Pall Mall Gazette, and in 1883 succeeded to the editorship, which place he filled from 1883 to 1889.

This period was notorious for his remarkable series of articles on "The Maiden Tribute of Modern Babylon," a crusade better known to-day as the agitation against the "white slave traffic." To establish his case he ventured on practical, personal endeavors, for which he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment, but this result forwarded rather than retarded the agitation for stricter protection for young girls. For four years longer he remained associated with The Pall Mall Gazette, and a few years later he established The Review of Reviews, a magazine which immediately won public favor, and was followed by others on similar lines in America and Australasia.

Stead came prominently before the British and world public in many ways. An ardent Radical, he bitterly opposed the Boer war and found public opinion strongly opposed to his attitude. On the cessation of the war he actively engaged in a universal peace propaganda and came prominently before the footlights as a bitter opponent of the Boer war. Later, Mr. Stead developed strong spiritualistic proclivities, and his other world adviser, "Julia," bulked largely in its articles. He was the author of many books and pamphlets, and apart from his peculiarities was one of the most successful journalists in the civilized world. His British Review of Reviews, founded in 1870, was not only highly popular from its inception, but prompted the foundation of the American Review of Reviews in 1891, and its Australiasian congener in 1894.

ASQUITH'S TRIBUTE

London, April 17.—Premier Asquith in a brief statement in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, gave public expression to Great Britain's sympathy in connection with the Titanic disaster. After reading out to the members the message from the White Star Co. already published, the Premier continued:

"Perhaps the House will allow me to add this: That I am afraid we must brace ourselves to comfort one of those terrible events in the order of Providence which appal the imagination, and make us realize the inadequacy of words to do justice to what we feel.

"We cannot say more at this moment than to give a necessarily imperfect impression of our sense of admiration that the best traditions of the sea seem to have been observed, and that willing sacrifices were offered to give the first chance for safety to those who were least able to help themselves, and of the heartfelt sympathy of the whole nation to those who find themselves suddenly bereaved of their nearest and dearest."

Will be in Charge of Horses for Mayor McLean—He Defended Divorce Action Successfully.

Brockville, April 17.—John J. Breen, who gained considerable notoriety two years ago by eloping with and marrying Miss Ethel Croker, daughter of Richard Croker, former boss of Tammany Hall, has been engaged as stable manager by Mayor C. W. McLean, who has just purchased a string of eighteen high-class show horses in New York. Breen has recently defended successfully a divorce action brought against him by his wife in the New York courts. He was formerly stable manager for Hon. J. R. Stratton of Peterboro, and while exhibiting some horses at the Ogdensburg Show last year, Breen was served by a deputy sheriff with the papers in the divorce action brought against him by his wife. The couple have been separated almost the whole time since their marriage, Mrs. Croker living with her daughter in Paris and at Mr. Croker's Irish villa near Dublin.

BIG STEAMERS ON THEIR WAY TO PORT WITH RESCUED PASSENGERS

Captain Smith, Commander of Titanic Had Been in Service of White Star Line for Over Thirty Years---Was Unfortunate With the Olympic ---New Device for Detection of Icebergs to be Tested.

New York, April 17.—Only a faint hope remains that any of the 1,302 passengers and crew who have been missing since the giant Titanic sank have been picked up by transatlantic liners. The 868 survivors, rescued from lifeboats by the Cunarder Carpathia, now on her way to this city, are only known saved.

The brief and meagre wireless messages that came to hand yesterday extinguished hope that some of the ill-fated passengers may have been picked up at sea by the steamships Virginian and Parisian of the Allan Line. Both of these steamers sent word that they had no passengers of the Titanic on board.

Of the 868 persons rescued by the Carpathia, the names of 326 passengers had been received by wireless up to 4.30 yesterday afternoon. The Carpathia evidently was out of wireless range toward noon, for after that efforts to reach her with wireless communications were futile and a score or more of messages from the Cunard Company and other sources were unanswered.

At five o'clock yesterday afternoon Vice-President Franklin of the White Star Line said that so far as he knew the Olympic was still standing by the Carpathia to relay wireless messages. He added that he had received no word from the Olympic since nine o'clock yesterday morning, and had been unable to get either the Carpathia or the Olympic by wireless.

Mr. Franklin also said that the steamship companies crossing the Atlantic had entered into an agreement to abandon the short northern route in favor of the southern route so long as icebergs were reported in the pathway of the former course.

The Titanic was insured for $5,000,000, Mr. Franklin said. On the ship, he added, the White Star Line would lose about $3,000,000. "This will be the smallest part of our loss," he added.

Captain Rostron, in his last wireless report to the Cunard Company, stated that the Carpathia was proceeding slowly through a field of ice to this port.

President Taft late yesterday afternoon directed the Secretary of the Navy to order the scout cruisers Salem and Chester to the scene at once from Hampton Roads to meet the Carpathia and send in by wireless to the Government a complete list of the Titanic's survivors. The Chester was caught by wireless about 40 miles off the Chesapeake Capes and by four o'clock was steaming northward at twenty knots an hour, aiming to get as quickly as possible in touch with steamers having news bearing on the disaster. Two revenue cutters were also notified to stand in readiness to proceed to the Carpathia if necessary. In the event that the Salem had not sufficient coal, instructions were given to despatch the cruiser North Carolina instead.

A possible chance of obtaining news bearing upon the disaster developed early last evening when the Leyland liner Californian came into the zone of wireless communication with Sable Island. The Californian was reported at the scene of the disaster shortly after the Titanic went down, and it was thought probable that she would have valuable information to communicate.

Capt. Rostron of the Carpathia has been instructed to send full details of the sinking of the Titanic.

All day long tearful and anxious throngs swarmed the offices of the White Star Line and overflowed into Broadway, stopping traffic at times and keeping police reserves busy maintaining order.

Col. John Jacob Astor is believed to be among those drowned. His wife and her maid are safe on the Carpathia. Isidor Straus, the millionaire merchant; Benjamin Guggenheim, the copper magnate and president of the International Steam Pump Co., and Edgar J. Meyer, vice-president of the Braden Copper Co., are still unaccounted for, and their names are not found among the survivors.

Whether Charles M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Railway, was saved was not known last night. His name was not among those reported rescued by the Carpathia. A Canadian despatch early in the day gave the information that Mr. Hays was saved. His wife and daughter were rescued.

The treasury department through the customs office, has given orders to expedite in every way the landing of the survivors of the Titanic and to aid them in every way in meeting their friends upon the arrival of the Carpathia. Customs regulations have been suspended and the customs officers will aid the survivors in finding their relatives and friends. Every person meeting a survivor will be assigned to a space under his initial letter at the dock, and the survivor will be sent there to meet him. This will be done to avoid confusion.

Vice-President Franklin said late yesterday afternoon that his list of survivors showed that 202 out of 325 first cabin passengers, and 114 out of 285 second cabin passengers of the wrecked liner should be accounted for.

Charles P. Summer, general agent of the Cunard line in this country, said last night that he believed that the Carpathia was within 60 or 70 miles of the Titanic when the big ship struck the iceberg. The Carpathia, he said, did not reach the scene of the accident until fully two hours afterward.

Five Officers Saved.

Cape Race, Nfld., April 17.—A wireless message last night from Captain Haddock of the steamship Olympic, relayed by the Celtic, reads as follows:

"Please allay rumors that the Virginian has any of the Titanic's passengers. Neither has the Tunisian. I believe that the only survivors are on the Carpathia. The second, third, fourth and fifth officers and the second marine operator are the only officers reported saved."

Captain's Career Previously Unlucky.

New York, April 17.—Although rated as one of the most able commanders, Captain Smith's career had been recently marred with ill-luck. He was in command of the Olympic when that vessel was in collision with the British cruiser Hawke. Exonerated, he was placed in command of the Titanic. He had been in the White Star Line Co.'s employ for more than thirty years, and his first important command was the Majestic.

Will Change Ocean Routes.

New York, April 17—The White Star Line, in consequence of reports of ice in the sea, has agreed with other lines to cross longitude 47 in latitude 40.10 on eastbound passages, commencing yesterday, and to cross longitude 47 in latitude 41, westbound.

Will Test the Device.

Ottawa April 17.—The Canadian Government will further co-operate this summer in experiments being conducted by Prof. Barnes for the perfection of his device for the detection of icebergs.

One of the Government boats will be sent down to the ice field area for the purpose of making further tests, and perfecting the thermometrical device, which, had it been in use, might have prevented the appalling disaster to the Titanic.

Southampton, Town of Mourning.

Southampton, April 17.—Distressing scenes have been witnessed throughout the morning at the White Star offices here, which have been thronged by the relatives of the crew of the Titanic. The town is absolutely stunned by the news of the disaster, which is the greatest blow that Southampton has ever sustained.

Every member of the crew had his home here, and the large proportion of them were natives of the town. No family in the city or its vicinity has not lost a relatve or friend.

Big Liner's Side Torn Out.

London, April 17.—Alexander Carlisle, lately chief designer for Harland & Wolff, the shipbuilders, and the designer of both the Titanic and Olympic, yesterday said:

"I never thought there was such a thing as an unsinkable ship. When the news first came that the Titanic was sinking by the head I thought it likely that she would reach port. The fact that she sank within four hours after the impact with the ice, indicates that her side was torn out."

Mr. Carlisle added: "Everything that could reasonably be thought of was done in the case of the Titanic and the Olympic in regard to the arranging of the bulkheads and other details, in order to minimize the risk of ordinary accident."

As to the number of boats carried by the Titanic, Mr. Carlisle said: "I am of the opinion that the large ships of the present day do not carry anything like a sufficient number of boats, but until the Board of Trade

Horse Distemper

Prince Edward Farmer Solemnly Declares "Nerviline" Is a Specific.

"After fifty years' experience in raising horses I can safely testify that no remedy gives such good results for an all-round stable liniment as Nerviline." Thus opens the very earnest letter of J. J. Evanston, who lives near Wellington, P. E. "I had a very valuable horse that took distemper a month ago, and was afraid I was going to lose him. His throat swelled and hard lumps developed. His nostrils ran and he had a terrible cough. I tried different remedies, but was unable to relieve my horse of his pain and suffering till, I started to use Nerviline. I mixed a bottle of Nerviline and sweet oil and rubbed the mixture on the throat and chest three times a day and you would scarcely believe the way that horse picked up. Nerviline cured him. I also have used Nerviline for colic in horses and cows, and earnestly recommend it to every man that is raising stock."

Nerviline CURES QUICKLY

For strains, sprains, swellings, colic, distemper, coughs, and colds, no liniment will prove so efficacious in the stable as "Nerviline"—it's good for man or beast, for internal or external use. Wherever there is pain, Nerviline will cure it. Refuse substitutes. Large bottles 50c, trial size 25c, at all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

UNION LABEL

THE ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

The work of the Ontario Legislature this session has been most notable. Many great advances in legislation were put on the statute books, showing that the Whitney Government has never before been so responsive to public opinion, so keenly anxious to do what it could to promote the best interests of the province. The session had a new interest from the fact that the Liberal contingent had a new leader, a man who had not played at politics as a serious business. Leader Rowell took up a lot of time discussing this, and that, asking questions, offering resolutions, prodding one thing and probing another, but in the face of his guerilla warfare, and his obstructive methods, the Whitney Government was able to get through with more real advanced work than at any session in recent years. The decision to spend five millions in opening up the Northland, the bilingual school announcement, the health act, compulsory vaccination, hydro-electric power legislation — of which Peterborough will receive direct benefit—and many other matters were very important.

The Northern Ontario development scheme means much to Southern Ontario. In the settlement of the millions of acres of fertile land in the great clay belt, the opening up of new mineral areas, the creating of new markets for manufacturers, the development of the North will mark an epoch in Ontario history. For instance, the development of water-powers, of which there are many in the northland, consequent upon the populating of the country, should bring work directly to Peterborough. Other manufacturers here will share in the prosperity that will be added unto the south. The spending of the five millions will have to be judiciously done, that Ontario may get full benefits from such a large expenditure but the Whitney administration may be depended on for that.

The compulsory vaccination bill is not so popular. Many will disagree with the idea that a man should be compelled to submit, willy-nilly, to vaccination, no matter what his prejudices may be to such treatment. The government has adopted the strong stand that the interests of public health must be supreme, and the liberty and rights of the individual must in this case be subordinate. No one can say the government is not taking strong and advanced steps, not for its own pleasure, not for its own gain, but simply because it thinks such a measure is required. The Review does not think with the government on the question. Apart from the merits of vaccination, it certainly should be within the legal right and province of any man to say that he will not be vaccinated, and that the state has no right to force him, not being a menace to his neighbors, to undergo any such treatment. However, in operation the bill is not likely to be nearly so terrifying or formidable as it appears upon paper.

The temperance legislation of the session was notable. It makes a distinct advance on what has obtained in Ontario. Leader Rowell screwed up his courage to the sticking point and came out for abolition of the bar, which was later construed to include abolition of club licenses. The Whitney Government did not take up such a radical step, however, preferring to go ahead with its temperance legislation a little more cautiously. It decided that to abolish the treating system would be to minimise the evil of the liquor traffic, without directly depriving the hotelmen of their livelihood all at once. It was another notch cut in the temperance tree, however, and with most people—if it can be worked out successfully—will be equally acceptable as a more extreme measure. The new members of the house, among them Mr. Peck, did splendid work, and were of great assistance in putting through much of the valuable legislation.

LOSS OF THE TITANIC

No marine disaster of the last twenty years equals that of the sinking of the magnificent steamer the Titanic. The last word in steamship construction and equipment, and on her maiden voyage, she struck an iceberg on Sunday night about ten o'clock and four hours later sank in the ocean to a depth of two miles. The details of the disaster are harrowing, and the loss of over thirteen hundred souls is estimated not to cover the full fatality.

The dangers of navigation will never be eliminated. Those who go down to the sea in ships are at the mercy of the elements, despite the safeguards provided by the skill of the marine architect and the resources of the builders. Striking an iceberg in the dead of night the bow section was crushed in, and only that the forward compartments resisted enabled the gigantic vessel to keep afloat.

The magnificent vessel was declared, at the time of her launching, to be unsinkable. All that human ingenuity could do to render her so had been done. The details of the actual crushing and forcing of the safeguards may never be known, but we are far from possessing the absolutely safe and secure vessel. The awful disaster heads the list of marine losses, not only on account of the loss of life, but from the financial loss as well, it having cost over $10,000,000 to construct and equip the vessel.

The papers are discussing the extradition of Beattie Nesbitt. This is all wrong. If extradited he may be only tried on the one charge on which his extradition was effected. The American Government should be asked to deport Nesbitt as an undesirable and one to be got rid of. Then he can be sent over the border, be picked up and jugged and tried on any and all counts, and get his deserts. The ingenuity of the law and lawyers should not be used to let Nesbitt go unscathed.

RESULTS HE GOT WERE PERFECT

Sam Mallette's Bright's Disease Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills

He Suffered Tortures and the Doctor Failed to Give Relief but Three Boxes Cured Him.

Rutter Station, Ont., April 16.—(Special).—"I got perfect results from Dodd's Kidney Pills." So says Mr. Sam Mallette, of this place. And he has a reason.

"My sickness started from a strain," Mr. Mallette continues, "and for a year I did not know a well day. My sleep was broken and unrefreshing, my appetite was fitful and my limbs would swell.

"Then rheumatism set in and neuralgia, backache, headache and heart trouble added to my tortures. I was attended by a doctor, but he did me no lasting good.

"Finally, when Brights' Disease had me in its grasp, I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills, and after taking three boxes, I was as well as ever I was in my life. I have had no pain since and advise all my friends who suffer from kidney disease to take Dodd's Kidney Pills and be cured."

Mr. Mallette's case shows what neglected kidney disease will result in and what splendid results Dodds' Kidney Pills give.

Acute Dyspepsia

Restoration of Stomach Power Comes Quickly With the Right Medicine.

"My food seemed to decompose in my stomach," writes Mr. Ralph Clemmons, of Newbridge, P.O. "I had a stomach that failed in some way to perform its work. Digestion seemed more or less arrested and I grew thin, yellow, nervous. The stomach became distended and impeded apparently the action of the heart, for often at night it would do great stunts. At times I would vomit a mucous mass, and at these times my head ached most terribly. A friend, who had been cured of a similar condition, advised me to take Dr. Hamilton's Pills regularly, which I did. The result in my case was simply marvelous. Dr. Hamilton's Pills removed the cause, strengthened the stomach, excited the liver to normal action, the kidneys were released of excessive work. Health soon glowed within me. I can now eat, sleep, and live like a live man."

Be advised—Use Dr. Hamilton's Pills—they are sure to do you good. 25c per box, at all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

DIABETES

Is one of the most cruel maladies of which mankind is subject, the many complications arising from time to time, making life seem almost unbearable. For many diseases, medical, scientific, and physiological knowledge and experience gained from years of deep research, has achieved remarkable results, but, up to now, little has been discovered of practical value in the treatment and cure of Diabetes. In fact, people have begun to look upon the disease as well-nigh incurable. Even in the medical profession can be found doctors who are of the same opinion, regarding sceptically any claim to ameliorate or improve the condition of a diabetic patient.

It can, however, be proved that SANSOL'S ANTIDIABETES lastingly cures all cases of Diabetes. Full particulars can be obtained from the Sansol Mfg. Co., Winnipeg, Man.

Lady Betty Across the Water

By C. N. & A. M. WILLIAMSON

Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

"And I guess that's the honorable," said the voice we had heard—such a nice voice; it was enough to make you laugh with pleasure just to hear it—and the head we could see towering over the sunbonnets began to move toward us. The girls edged away good naturedly, and there was a man almost as fine looking as Mr. Brett smiling at us and holding out his big hand.

Everything was big about him—his voice, his brown throat, his shoulders and his good white smile, shining with kindness and two rows of perfect teeth; his nature, too, as you could see by his beaming, humorous gray eyes and the generous dimple in his square chin.

"Whit, this is the little English ladyship I've told you about who's staying over at our house," said Mr. Trowbridge. So we were introduced, and the great Whit shook my hand with a vigorous magnetism which made me feel I would like to clap and give him three cheers.

He is the sort of man I should try to make president of the United States if I were an American, and I'm sure he would get lots of votes from his part of the country if he were nominated.

"I'm real pleased to meet you," said he, "and I'm honored to have you visit my store. Say, I guess some of our American leading ladies will have to get a hustle on if they want to save themselves now you're over here. I didn't know they made 'em like that on your side. I tell you what it is, honorable, I won't have much use for some of our fellows if they let her go back, eh? Now, ma'am, you just tell me what handle I'm to put to your name, but I think I'll call you princess."

"Then I'll call you prince."

Accompanied by Mr. Walker and Patty, whom he chose as the companion of our explorations, we went upstairs and downstairs and left no corner of the Emporium unvisited.

"Aren't you afraid to leave so many things outside on the veranda?" I asked. "Suppose they should be stolen?"

The great man only laughed, but a lanky customer who overheard drawled out:

"What, steal from Whit Walker of Hermann's Corners! Waal, I guess the skunk mean enough to do that would get himself lynched by every decent chap in this darned county."

"I've got one friend, you see, princess," chuckled my king of the Emporium.

"You've got two," said I.

"Well, now, that's mighty pretty of you. Say, do you mean it, honor bright?"

"Honor bright," I repeated.

"Then I wonder if I might ask a little favor of you?"

"Of course. What is it?"

"I'll tell you before we part. But come on down now, girls. I want you should both choose a present to take home."

By this time the "ice cream festival" was beginning. It was held in a vacant lot behind the Emporium, and a canvas awning had been put up over two or three dozen bare tables on the grass. Several employees of the "store," extra hands perhaps, were kept frantically busy ladling out from huge freezers into earthenware saucers big slabs of frozen custard. All the gallant young beaux of the neighborhood "treated" the girls they wished to favor and spent 10 cents a saucer for the "ice cream," with a big sugared "cooky" thrown in. The great Whit himself invited me to sit down with him. So Mr. Brett, who had been coming up to ask Patty and me both perhaps, whisked Patty away, leaving me to Mr. Walker.

"Now I'll tell you that favor I want," said he. "I hope you won't think I'm presuming too much on a short acquaintance, but it's a mighty important thing for me. It's about that little gal over there."

"Patty?" I asked.

He nodded.

"Nobody else. There ain't anybody else, so far as I'm concerned, meaning no disrespect to you, princess. My old friend the honorable says she just worships you and would lie down and let you walk over her if you wanted."

"I didn't know," I said.

"Well, it's gospel truth, I guess, and I don't blame her. If you"—

"She has been sweet to me," I interrupted.

"It's just like that pretty, quiet little thing," said Mr. Walker. "I wish she'd be that sweet to me. I want her mighty bad to have me, princess, but she's read novels, I guess, and anyhow, she doesn't think I'm romantic enough. I was always kind of afraid there was somebody else. Now, I shouldn't wonder if it ain't that good looking young cousin of the Trowbridges. Couldn't you find out for me, as she thinks such a lot of you? And if she hasn't got her heart too much set on anybody else, could you try to use your influence for me?"

"You can depend on me to do my best," I said. But I didn't feel amused and full of fun any more as I looked over at Patty and Mr. Brett. If she admires him—and how could she help it?—there's no reason why he shouldn't admire her when one comes to think of it. She is pretty and sweet, a perfect little lady and an heiress.

Chapter 19

I FELT when I got up this morning that I was in a dreadfully embarrassing and uncomfortable position about Patty and my promise to Mr. Walker. If I kept it and tried to use my influence with her it might be that I would be working against Mr. Brett. It would be hateful to do that, as we are such friends, but I was afraid there must be something rather catty in my nature (though I never thought so before) because I could not approve of a marriage between him and Patty. My private opinion was that Patty wasn't at all the sort of girl to make him happy, but I didn't dare to depend too much on the wisdom of my opinion lest it should be biased by prejudice. It is so hard when you have a friend who has been all yours to see that some other girl may be more congenial to him than you are and that the best thing for him would be to fall in love with her.

Mr. Brett has known Patty for a long time, and, though he hasn't been here often, he has made flying visits sometimes, I know, and even Patty and Ide both call him "Jim," never Mr. Brett. I reminded myself as I thought it all over that probably one reason why he wanted to stay with his cousins now was to see Patty again, not in the least because of his friendship with me, which is quite a recent thing compared to his acquaintance with Patty. I was so jealous of Patty, because she could perhaps take away my best friend and have him for her lover, that all her pretty ways and looks quite annoyed me, and I felt I could have slapped her.

Such feelings made me hate myself, for it is so unpleasant finding out suddenly that you are a brute. Yet I would not indulge my wicked heart by telling Patty that she ought to marry Mr. Walker. I could scarcely eat any breakfast or dinner, and early in the afternoon I crept out of doors, very miserable. I felt that Vivace was the only being on earth who really cared for me, and even he was more interested at the time in a rabbit hole he had found than in my society. He wouldn't come away from it when I called, so I bundled him under my arm and walked off with him to the sugar camp, where I could be alone and think things over without having people say I looked pale and ask whether the ice cream festival at Hermann's Corners had given me a headache.

I sat there in the deep green shade of the maples on the log where Mr. Brett and I had talked the first day I came to the Valley farm. All the disagreeable things that ever happened to me since I was a child took this opportunity to stir in their graves and come to life again. Then they sat down in front of me in a dreary semicircle, staring me in the face until I couldn't stand it any longer and began to cry. Vivace was very much surprised and jumped up, with his paws in my lap, as if he were saying, "What is the matter?" This was a comfort, and I put my head down on his, with my arms around his neck, and cried more.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY

An eminent scientist, the other day gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore much injury is assured against blood poison! Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk. They care nothing for the science of the thing. All they know is that Zam-Buk stops their pain. Mothers should never forget this.

Again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh healthy tissue from below is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. The tissue thus formed is worked up to the surface and literally casts off the diseased tissue above it. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day, Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimier Ave., Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Company and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. His hands were at one time so covered with sores that he had to sleep in gloves. Four years ago Zam-Buk was introduced to him, and in a few months it cured him. Today—over three years after his cure, of a disease he had for twenty-five years—he is still cured and has no trace of any return of the eczema!

All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c box, or we will send free trial box if you send this advertisement and a 1c. stamp (to pay return postage) Address Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Children Taken, Mother Dies.

Nniagara Falls, Ont., April 17.—Deserted by her husband, and her two children taken from her by her husband's sister, Mrs. Frank Stevens, died yesterday at Memorial Hospital, American side, following the birth of a daughter Friday. The child died the following day. That worry over the loss of her other children was responsible for her death is believed by physicians.

Washington's Etiquette.

Every action in company ought to be some sign of respect to those present.

In the presence of others sing not to yourself with a humming noise nor drum with your fingers or feet.

Speak not when others speak, sit not when others stand and walk not when others stop.

Turn not your back to others, especially in speaking.

Be no flatterer; neither trifle with any one that does not delight in such familiarities.

Read no letters, books or papers in company except when necessary; then ask to be excused.

Come not near the books or writing of any one so as to read them unasked.

Let your countenance be pleasant, but in serious matters somewhat grave.

Baby O'Grundy.

Grew whiskers on Saturday,
Fell in love Sunday,
And that was the end

Tale of Sandy Brown, a Noble Collie Dog.

Sandy Brown is always happy;
You can't make him cross and glum.
Tease him and he won't be snappy—
He's a dandy for a chum.
Doesn't care if boots are muddy.
Though his eyes and wits are keen,
He's no such a "fuddy-duddy"
As to ask if boots are clean.

Sandy saved my life last winter.
I thought that the ice was sound
And fell through, but he's a sprinter
And soon had me on dry ground.
Not a single streak of yellow
In him can you ever strike.
Sandy's just the kind of fellow
That a fellow's bound to like!

He sticks closer than a brother:
Right by me you'll see him jog
Rain or shine. There's only mother
Good as Sandy Brown, my dog.
—St. Nicholas.

The Hypnotic Trick.

If you have in your company any persons good natured enough to appreciate a joke on himself the following trick will furnish much fun: Announce that you will hypnotize any friend who is willing to follow your directions. Retire from the room and take two cups and saucers. Put your own carefully aside. Then take the other saucer and hold it over a lamp or candle until the under part is covered with soot. Put the cup back in the saucer. Fill the cups with water. Then tell your friend who is to be hypnotized that it is impossible for the spell to work unless he follows your directions exactly. Present him with a cup and saucer. Tell him to hold these in his left hand and, looking straight into your eyes and nowhere else, to do exactly what you do.

Then dip the fingers of your right hand in the water, rub them on the under side of your saucer and make cabalistic passes over your forehead and cheeks. The patient to be hypnotized will do the same, and as the under side of his saucer is thick with soot every cabalistic pass will leave its mark. The effect on the part of the company, who are entirely unprepared for this denouement, soon enlightens the victim.

Game of Broken Hearts.

Heart shaped red cards about 3 by 2¼ inches are provided. The children are seated in a line or a circle. Every fourth child is given a pair of scissors and each one a heart shaped card on a book or magazine. Each child is to cut his heart twice across so as to make four pieces. The cuts should be perfectly straight, but should intersect each other and may go in any direction. After the heart is cut once the pieces should be held together till the second cut has been made. Each child then mixes his pieces and passes them to his neighbor on the right. At a signal each child tries to put his puzzle together, and the first child who succeeds calls out to that effect. Each child then mixes his puzzle and passes it on to his right hand neighbor as before. This is kept up for a half hour, when time is called and the child with the biggest score receives a prize.

The Secretary.

This is a good pencil game. The players sit at a table with square pieces of paper and pencils, and each one writes his own name at the top of the paper and, folding it over so that the name does not show, hands it to the secretary, who redistributes the papers, saying, "Character." Then each one writes some imaginary character description, folds the paper again and hands it to the secretary, who says, "Future," and shuffles and distributes the papers as before.

Some forecast for the future is then written. The secretary may suggest as many other subjects as he chooses or can think of and when ready may call in the papers and read them aloud. They are often curious and very amusing. This is on the order of the old game of "consequences," but with more chance for originality and variety.

DALTONS COFFEE — Never sold in Bulk

To get to the heart of the coffee question, you must do as we did—get to the heart of the coffee berry. The coffee berry is protected by Nature from the insect world, by a tough inner shell or coat. This shell contains tannin and other bitter substances.

It is this shell, roasted and ground up with ordinary coffee, that causes indigestion, headaches and other ill-effects so common with coffee drinkers.

Yet there is no other beverage in the world so thoroughly wholesome healthful and delicious as good Coffee when properly made.

Dalton's French Drip Coffee

is this good, wholesome, delicious coffee. It contains no chicory and by our special process of grinding, every particle of the bitter tannin-bearing shell is removed. We take out all the injurious parts. We leave the meat—the heart—the flavor—the aromatic essences that mean so much to coffee-lovers.

The Percolator, or French Drip Process, is the only way to make really good coffee. We have secured sole rights at last for a practical, economical, reliable French Drip Coffee Pot.

Important Advice
To SPECTACLE WEARERS

Three Plain Facts

1 That more eyes are injured by the injurious use of Glasses than by any other known cause.

2 That a great number of people are wearing spectacles unsuitable for them, and for which their eyes have not been tested.

3 That the old fashioned and unscientific method of testing the eyes by trying on various spectacles of different strengths until the sight is apparently suited, is to say the least of it, dangerous.

It cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of those who suffer from defective eye-sight that proper lenses and correctly fitting frames are absolutely essential for comfortable spectacle wearing. We grind our own lenses.

OPTION ON PARSONAGE ILLEGAL SAYS REV. PEARSON

Hamilton, April 16.—"If that has been done it has been done illegally," declared Rev. E. A. Pearson, pastor of Wesley Methodist church, this afternoon when informed that the city had been given an option on the parsonage. He said he was not at all sure that the property would be sold to the city. The city was given the option by Thorpe and Thompson, real estate dealers, and Mr. Thompson informed the mayor and controllers that he had canvassed the trustee board of the church and that the majority of the board was favorable to the house being sold for shelter purposes.

FIRST CONCERT OF ST. GEORGE'S CHORAL SOCIETY

After weeks of arduous, yet pleasurable training, the recently organized body of songsters known as the St. George's Choral Society, achieved a pronounced success, if not a triumph, before a medium sized audience at the Grand Opera House last evening, in the first of what will henceforth be an annual concert. The St. George's Choral Society is an organization of seventy voices, splendidly trained, and well balanced. Under the musicianly and masterly direction of Mr. E. Thompson, it has been brought to a highly effective degree of development, one of the most noticeable and striking features of their work being the volume of which they are capable, and their exceedingly finished singing individually, as well as collectively. Every member of the chorus is a singer, and when the voices are used in unison the effect is undeniably fine.

Of the program supplied by the talented organization, it may be truthfully said, that the quality and variety was all that could be desired. The selections were of the character that catered most suitably to the ordinary musical taste, and some real gems of homely, yet beautiful English musical composition were furnished in glees, choruses, quartettes and solos.

The extremely lengthy nature of the program prevented encoring, to some extent, although in nearly every instance such were demanded.

The commencing number was "God Save the King," the Choral Society leading in the chorus, and the audience, rising during its rendition and uniting in the singing. Following this came Cuthbert Harris' merry hunting chorus, "Waken Lords and Ladies." This selection was characterized by the same admirable qualities that marked every successive chorus.

"The Death of Nelson," by Braham, was sung by Mr. George Deakin. The patriotic strain which permeates this rousing and inspiring number was capably brought out by the strong ringing tones of Mr. Deakin's vocalism. He was forced to return and give an encore number.

The old, but ever popular quartette favorite, "The City Choir," proved just as acceptable as ever, rendered by Messrs. Thompson, Lee, Brown and Dickson. The humorous mixed quartette selection "Pro Phundo Basso" written by P. P. Bliss, was introduced very effectively. It is a descriptive number each soloist coming in singly with his or her part. While each voice was full of harmony, the alto was most capably and pleasingly taken by Miss Ada Lee. In the production of "The Bells of St. Michaels" the chorus was at its best, a perceptable strength being prominent in every part.

Mrs. A. Wells, in her singing of "The Swallows" an extremely melodious number, was heard to decided advantage. She is a soloist possessing a clear, soprano voice, well under control and above all distinguished by feeling and sympathy, apparent to all. The audience compelled her answering its insistent encore. The same may be said of Miss Ada Lee, who though young in years, possesses a mature, well-developed mezzo soprano, that enabled her to create a very favorable impression in her rendition of "The Dear Home Songs."

Dr. Park delighted the audience with a faultlessly performed violin number, which drew hearty applause.

The accompanist at the piano was Mrs. Greenslade.

As a reader and elocutionist, Miss Maggie Moss exhibited most commendatory talents, and her numbers were among the most appreciated of the evening. Her "If I Were a Man," was very ludicrous, putting the audience into fits of laughter.

Taken altogether the Choral Society scored a big success and the perfect rounding into shape and high state of development speaks eloquently for the painstaking efforts of their leader and the energy and abilities of the performers themselves.

The principles in the chorus were as follows:

Sopranos—Mrs. A. Wells, Mrs. Bert Read.
Contralto—Miss Ada Lee.
Tenor—Mr. Geo. Deakin.
Basses—Mr. R. Dickson, Mr. J. Burnette.
Elocutionist—Miss Maggie Moss.
Accompanist—Miss Flowers.
Solo Violin—Dr. Park.
Conductor—Mr. E. Thompson.

THE ORGANIZATION.

On January 16, 1912, at the ordinary meeting of the Peterborough St. George's Society, it was decided to form a Choral Society. Mr. B. Read was elected organizer.

It was decided that, although formed under the auspices of the St. George's Society, the membership would not necessarily be confined to English ladies and gentlemen, but would be open to any ladies and gentlemen in Peterborough, interested in choral work. The only stipulation made was that members elected to any official positions in the St. George's Choral Society must become members of the parent body. To become eligible for membership a man must be English or Welsh birth or descent in the male line. The first meeting of the Choral Society was held on Tuesday, Jan. 23, when there were 26 persons present. In two months from that date the Society had 73 members on the books, showing that the forming of a Choral Society was appreciated. Practically every choir in the city is represented in the membership, thus showing the general interest taken in this class of work. The society is supported by members' subscriptions, governed by the committee elected from the members. The finances are under control of the members. It will be the aim of the committee to promote a social spirit among the members. To this end occasional rambles and socials will be arranged during the year as well as an annual banquet and a picnic in the summer. Any further particulars regarding the society will be furnished to intending members by the secretary, Mr. B. Read, 139 Rubidge street.

Northern Exposures Ideal For Indoor Blooming Bulbs.

People who like to replant and grow hyacinth bulbs indoors will find help in remembering that there is likely to be trouble if the pots are at once brought into a strong light, as many times the bud refuses to come out of the bulb until the flower spike is formed, in which case there will be a deformed flower.

You can prevent this by placing on the pot a paper cone, fitting the top inside its rim, made of any paper which is opaque, as blue, green or red. The cone should have an inch opening at the top, and the effect will be to make the bud draw up toward the light. When it has cleared the top of the bulb remove the cone.

There is no fertilizer to be given the bulbs when they are brought in for blooming, as any given would have no effect on this year's blooms. The flower is made or spoiled in the growing of the roots. If a fine, large mass of fine fibrous feeding roots are grown while the pot is in the dark there will be a large, fine flower; if not, it will be in proportion to the mass of roots. This is why the addition of fertilizer after it has been brought into the light has no effect on the blooming of the bulb.

However, there should be an abundance of water given the bulbs, and it should be kept in mind that for the best effects we must simulate nature's way of growing them as far as we can.

In a state of nature they bloom outdoors early in the spring, when the ground is wet and cool and the sun heat makes little impression on the temperature. In order to reproduce these conditions we give the pots plenty of water and keep them out of the direct rays of the sun. A north window is an ideal place for spring blooming bulbs when being grown in the house.

SPRING BLOUSES.

A Craze For Color Follows Long Reign of White.

Many women are engaged nowadays in making blouses for next summer out of gayly striped handkerchief linen or else embroidering a tiny colored picot scallop for the edge of a blouse ruffle. There is a craze for color after the lengthy reign of white, so the stripes are wide, and their colors—pink, currant, blue, green or yellow—are by no means of the pastel order, but quite deep enough to stand a bit of fading and still be good to see.

Those who make a point of keeping up with the modes are not putting the ruffles on their blouses yet, and some are merely tucking the sheer goods in blouse lengths and rolling them up to be cut when Dame Fashion has said her final word for the season. Others will make their blouses up in the style they consider most becoming to their particular style of beauty, trusting to looks rather than modes.

For the southern wardrobe a dozen white china silk shirts made exactly like those of men are not considered too many.

Since the all white blouse has ceased to be considered smart when worn in combination with a dark tailored costume there has been room for as many substitutes for it as it has been possible to devise. One clever modiste has created a charming and unique affair of white crepe de chine striped with half inch bands of velvet in a color to match the suit. It is made in a soft Russian style, with a heavy velvet cord marking the waist line, coats now being long enough to hide a blouse of this kind.

New Bath Accessory.

Wooden bowls to float in the bath carrying one's favorite soap are an obvious device that might have been invented long ago, it seems. Some are beautifully carved, others stained to match the prevailing color of the suit, and each has the owner's initials burned in or riveted on in metal.

The Thrice Practical Blouse.

The lucky possessor of a three in one blouse can wear it in three different ways. This waist is particularly useful to the woman who goes on short journeys with her belongings in a suit case or traveling bag.

The blouse proper is a dainty, simple affair of cream colored net veiled with all over cream colored lace. The blouse fastens at the back, though there is a row of tiny pearl buttons down the front in accordance with a new fashion. The second blouse feature is a jumper of dark chiffon, which may be slipped on over the lace waist with a dark tailored suit of a popular worsted mixture.

The third feature is an adjustable belt and cuff set of deep cream venise lace, which makes the dark chiffon jumper of the simple lace waist doubly dressy and dainty.

The largest bone in the human frame is the wishbone.

LINDSAY WILL BE MINUS THE TUDHOPE-ANDERSON COMPANY

The Plant to be Removed to Orillia—A Raw Deal Says The Post.

Lindsay Post—This morning the rumor was circulated about the street that the Tudhope, Anderson Company had notified their employees that their works would be closed down on Saturday evening and the plant would be at once removed to Orillia to the company's new building, which is now completed and ready for occupation, and all the men employed by them in Lindsay, would be given employment in that town.

This announcement will be received with regret, mingled with surprise, by our citizens, and the action of the Tudhope-Anderson Co., cannot be considered anything but a breach of faith, as the citizens were assured by the company that they would operate in Lindsay for at least three years. The Post welcomed the company to Lindsay, as it felt along with the citizens generally that the coming of such a concern to the town meant much for its industrial future. It looks however, as if the town had been handed a raw deal, and it is incumbent upon the Tudhope-Anderson Co. to explain their actions.

C.G.E. ENPLOYEE STRUCK BY JACKSON PARK CAR AT AYLMER ST. CORNER

Mr. R. Brown, who resides on Antrim street, had a miraculous escape from serious injury if not death, as he was returning to work at the Canadian General Electric Company to-day at noon.

He was riding on his wheel, going south on Aylmer street and did not notice the eastbound Jackson Park car in time to turn either direction on Charlotte street.

The car struck him but he fell on the fender with the wheel, both being dragged along till the motorman succeeded in stopping the car.

Eye witnesses of the accident feared that the man had at least been seriously injured, but on gaining his feet, Mr. Brown found that he had only collected some of the early summer dust. He escaped without a scratch and was able to continue with his wheel to his place of employment.

ECLIPSE OF THE SUN; DISASTER TO THE TITANIC A STRANGE COMBINATION

Dr. Marsh, of Springville, who has been making some interesting observations of the eclipse of the sun, informed the Review to-day that this morning the sun was visible at 5.30 o'clock, with the sky clear, with the exception of a rosy atmospheric condition, and owing to this he was unable to photograph the sun till six o'clock and five minutes. The first exposure shows a photograph of 5 1-2 in. in diameter, the time being one ten thousandths of a second. A second exposure at six o'clock, 32 min. and 20 sec., was of the same time. At six o'clock, 39 min. and 45 sec., the eclipse was over.

These photographs may be seen in the show windows of Roy's Studio tomorrow.

This eclipse is associated with the disaster which befel the Titanic, Monday morning for the centre of the eclipse would be in mid-ocean and not very far from where the Titanic struck the iceberg and later sank with over one thousand of her passengers. The centre of the eclipse, it is calculated, would have been 24 hours before the disaster. In past ages people were superstitious of an eclipse and considered it an ill omen but in this enlightened age eclipses come and go without much thought of impending misfortune. This recent appearance of the eclipse is, however remarkable.

CHORISTERS SANG HYMN FOR THOSE ON THE SEA

Eternal Father, strong to save,
Whose arm hath bound the restless wave,
Who bidd'st the mighty ocean deep
It's own appointed limits keep;
O hear us when we cry to Thee
For those in peril on the sea.

O Christ, whose voice the waters heard
And hush'd their raging at Thy word,
Who walkedst on the foaming deep,
And calm amid the storm did'st sleep;
O hear us when we cry to Thee
For those in peril on the sea.

These two verses of the hymn for these at sea were sung by the members of the St. George's Choral Society, after the singing of O Canada, at the Grand Opera House last night.

The depressing thoughts occasioned by the awful disaster in midocean, brought home earlier in the day, to those who made up the audience, had to some extent been forgotten as the the program of song proceeded.

But the number not on the program it is safe to say made the deepest impression and as the choristers sang the two verses of the well known hymn, many heads were bowed in accord with the choral call to the "Unseen Hand," to succor the afflicted.

PETES OPEN CANADIAN LEAGUE SEASON ACCORDING TO SCHEDTLE AT HAMILTON

The Hamilton Spectator says— After several delays, the Canadian leagu eschedule was finally issued today, a draft being mailed to each club for approval this afternoon. As soon as the clubs have a chance to check over the fixtures, a meeting of the league, will be called for the purpose of adopting the schedule and completing final arrangements for the opening of the season on May 14. The schedule as sent out to-day calls for the opening games as follows—

May 14—Peterboro at Hamilton.
—Guelph at London.
—Ottawa at St. Thomas.
—Berlin at Brantford.
May 16—Hamilton at Guelph.
—Berlin at Ottawa.
May 22—St. Thomas at Peterboro.
June 6—Brantford at Berlin.

The Peterboro club will not open at home until May 22, while the Berlin team will b eon the road until June 6 owing to the fact that the Berlin ball park will not be ready for use until that date.

The schedule was a rather difficult one to draft, the long jump to Peterboro and Ottawa affording many difficulties, as did the Sunday games in Hull. The desire to save as much as possible on travelling expenses also formed another formidable bit of trouble, but it is thought that a satisfactory draft has at last been prepared and that the schedule with but one or two changes will be adopted. The uncertainty as to Sunday ball in Ottawa and one or two other important matters, resulted in the schedule being held back longer than anticipated, although even now it is being issued in plenty of time.

Ottawa certainly means business in the Canadian League as manager Cook has landed Jack Callahan, a crack, Chicago outfielder and a .336 hitter which three American Association clubs have sought after, but failed to land.

The Canadian League managers are—

Ottawa—Louis Cook.
Berlin—Rube Deneau.
London—Frank Bowerman.
Hamilton—Knotty Lee.
Guelph—Frank Needham.
Brantford—Ambrose Kane.
Peterboro—Curtis Templin.
St. Thomas—Probably Eddie Siever.

St. Thomas Times—The disheartening news was received this morning that Gilbert Forgue, shortstop, was critically ill with blood poisoning, which developed from an operation to his glands. Forgue was the sensation of the league last season, a faster fielder than "Scotty" Cameron, Grieve or Brant, in the eyes of the majority of fans. President Stanley said to-day that it would take $2,000 of good Canadian money to secure his release from the local club should he show the form this season he did last. His batting average last season was .304.

To Locate Underground Water.

A French inventor has contrived an application of the microphone to the discovery of underground water. One end of a tube is inserted in the ground the upper end being attached to the microphone. The sounds of flowing or dropping water are conveyed to the ear from great depths. In the Marne valley two springs were discovered with this apparatus at a depth of about 50 feet below the surface of the ground. It is believed that the apparatus will be of great service in mining operations both for indicating the location of concealed springs and for communicating with imprisoned miners.

Bristol's Dyspeptic Pig

Story of an Up to Date Farmer

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The sun shone down on Frank Bristol's model farm, but there was no sunshine in the heart of its owner, nor did there appear to be gladness in the soul of the owner's pig. That stout, black bristled beast lay inertly on a bed of clean straw against the clean wall of its scientifically built cement pen.

The model farmer sat on the top of the cement wall watching his black pig with anxious eyes. The pig had been lying there since morning, scarcely noticing the trough full of sweet milk and potato parings that Bristol's housekeeper had reluctantly placed there.

"Sweet milk's too good for pigs, Mr. Bristol," Ann Dangler had said as sharply as she dared.

"Sweet food makes sweet pork," replied the model farmer coolly, and Ann had tossed her head and returned to her kitchen to bang the pots and kettles about.

"It looks as if it was going to make dead pork this time," she grumbled.

Quite regardless of Ann Dangler's opinions, Frank Bristol continued to sit on the wall of his pigpen and contemplate the prostrate form of its solitary occupant. He was a handsome pig, sleek and clean, as befitted a pig living in a scientifically built and cleanly pen. But he was ailing. For two days he had moped around the pen and refused to eat of the delicious food set forth by the highly scandalized housekeeper.

"It's indigestion," concluded the model farmer, again consulting the farm manual issued by his alma mater—the agricultural college he attended. "This book says 'to compel the animal to take exercise—prod it with a stick until it runs violently around its inclosure. This mode of treatment, combined with a feeding of thin gruel, formed of two parts of white cornmeal to one part of skimmilk, will soon restore the pig to normal health.' Hum! I guess I'll go and tell Ann to make the gruel."

"Make gruel for a sick pig—never!" cried Ann Dangler when Mr. Bristol mildly made this suggestion, waving the farm manual as authority.

"Why not, Ann?"

"Because it's all nonsense. Leave him alone, Mr. Bristol, and he'll be all right. He's too clean to be real healthy. Why, pigs has been raised for years and years in all kinds of pens, and I never heard of one being sick before. This one's took cold from your turning the hose on him the other day."

"If you'll have the gruel ready at 4 o'clock I'll come in for it," was Mr. Bristol's reply to this pointed harangue.

When she was alone Ann Dangler meekly stirred the fire and set on a kettle of skimmed milk. That was always the way these arguments with Frank Bristol ended. It was apparent that there was room for only one "boss" on the model farm.

Meanwhile Bristol had provided himself with the necessary prod in the shape of a boathook and had made his way to the pigpen.

The animal was breathing heavily, now and then grunting a bass note.

Frank Bristol opened the patent gate and stepped inside, closing the gate behind him. He went up behind the unsuspecting porker and prodded him gently with the sharp end of the boathook.

With an astonished squeal the pig bounded from his bed and ran to the farther corner of the pen.

"What are you doing in there?" demanded a nasal voice.

Bristol turned around. "Ah, Mr. Daley, how are you today?"

"Pretty fair. Don't seem to be nothing the matter with your pig."

"I'm forcing him to take a little exercise," said Bristol, once more jabbing the pig with the boat hook and sidestepping as the animal raced around the pen. "He's got a bad case of indigestion, and I'm trying to cure it."

Ben Daley opened a capacious mouth and roared. "Who ever heard of a pig having indigestion?" he questioned between roars. "If he's reely sick, Mr. Bristol, you better make him up a mess of hog fennel and make him drink it. That'll do him more good than running around like that. Hawgs waren't created to take vi'lent exercise. 'Tain't their natur' so to do."

"This—one—seems—to—take—to—it—pretty—naturally!" puffed Bristol, as he dodged to and fro, getting in jabs at the infuriated pig.

"You mark my words, young man, you'll have that there pig chasing you before long!" was Ben Daley's ominous parting when he went.

Frank Bristol had realized this already. Whatever had been the matter with his pet pig, the animal had appeared to have recovered from the malady with unexpected rapidity and, try as he might, the model farmer could not escape from the path of the charging beast long enough to unfasten the patent gate and get out of the pen.

Now and then the race around the inclosure reached a stage when Frank Bristol was in pursuit of the pig, but that was when the pig fell behind a little. Once Frank turned and yelled "Shoo!" at the pig, just as a woman would have done, but the pig only dropped his snout to the ground and charged at him.

"I—wish—I—hadn't—made—this—wall—quite—s-o—high!" panted Frank Bristol as he dodged a sudden feint of the pig and was finally compelled to jump clear over the animal.

"I—wish—A-Ann Dangler—would—bring—out that gru-u-el!" he said later, as he stumbled over the trough and arose with one hand dripping with milk. This time the pig nearly reached him. He managed to jab again at the pig, and the pig stopped in front of the patent gate to take stock of his wounds and grunt defiance at his owner. It was at that moment Frank heard voices outside the high stone wall of the pigpen.

One voice was the shrill utterance of Ann Dangler; the other voice belonged to the girl but for whom he would never have become a farmer. He had once been engaged to Violet Sloan, but Violet's lovely auburn head had been turned by the worship of a dozen other admirers, and they had quarreled, and Frank had closed up his real estate office and taken to scientific farming. "Getting next to nature," was one way of describing the case.

"He's in the pigpen most likely," Ann Dangler was saying in a hostile voice.

"Pigpen!" shrieked Violet Sloan's accents. "What on earth is he doing in such a filthy place?"

"Filthy!" returned Ann Dangler. "I guess you never see a pigpen that wasn't filthy except this one. 'Tain't natural for a pig to live so clean, I say. Why, Mr. Bristol even turns the hose on him once a week, and that's what's the matter now. The pig has caught cold from being too clean."

"Nonsense," returned Violet. "Who ever heard of any one thriving in dirt? If Frank must raise pigs I'm glad they are nice clean pigs in a cement pigpen."

"Humph!" was Ann's reply as she followed the daintily dressed girl to the cement wall.

"Ah, here is a gate! Shall we go and look inside?" asked Violet, and without waiting for Ann's reply she moved toward the patent gate. Ann trotting close behind. The sight that met their eyes glued them to the patent gate.

Around and around the circular pen raced the weary form of the model farmer. Behind him trotted with dogged persistency the dyspeptic pig. Whenever Bristol showed a tendency to slacken his gait the pig grunted and cantered faster.

Once the pig darted into the covered sleeping pen, and Bristol shot to the door and endeavored to roll the sliding portal to its place, but in vain. It stuck, and ere Bristol could move it the pig dashed out again, shooting the model farmer to an ignominious position on the straw of the pen.

Thoroughly angry, Bristol swung the boat hook at the beast only to have the slippery handle slide through his hands to the far side of the pen.

Now he was without a weapon. Then the pig charged him again, grunting angrily.

He did not dare look at the gate, though he was conscious of feminine forms standing there. He was too excited to wonder what Violet Sloan was doing there. He was mentally composing a letter to be written to the author of the article in the farm manual on "Dyspepsia In Pigs." In this imaginary letter there were many underscored words and countless exclamation points and innumerable interrogation points.

He was still doing this humiliating marathon around the scientifically built pigpen when he heard an indignant cry from Ann Dangler. From the corner of his eye, as he ran ahead of the pig, he saw Violet Sloan snatch Ann Dangler's pink sunbonnet from her tow colored head, saw Violet's lithe form slip inside the patent gate, saw her intercept the pig with one flash of the pink bonnet and witnessed an instant later that animal rushing to the far side of the inclosure with frightened squeals, while the pink sunbonnet was tied over his snout and eyes.

"Hurry through—dear!" cried Violet Sloan, holding the gate open for her one time lover to escape.

As the gate slammed behind them Ann Dangler flounced toward the house, her sunbonnetless head held high in the air—a very model of scandalized virtue.

"Dear!" she sniffed contemptuously as she rocked to and fro in the calico covered kitchen rocker. "Call him 'dear'—a man I wouldn't look at twice! I wonder who she is?"

At that instant Mr. Bristol appeared at the door, leading Violent Sloan by the hand. They both looked very happy. "I suppose you wonder who this lady is, Ann Dangler," remarked Bristol pleasantly. "This is now Miss Sloan. Later on she will be Mrs. Bristol and the boss of the model farm!"

"But no more dyspeptic pigs," said Violet decisively. "Poor Frank has run off all the flesh he gained by being in the country here, and the pig is dead—dead as a doornail!"

And the local veterinarian declared that the pig died of acute dyspepsia, induced by too violent exercise after eating.

Ann Dangler insisted that it was because the pig was too scientifically clean.

Ben Daley said it must have been the way the wind was.

Violet Sloan and Frank Bristol—and they were the only two whose opinion on the subject mattered, as the pig was dead—did not say a word. They had not heard anything except their own voices discussing the wedding details.

The Arabs are reported to have left 400 dead after a battle on the Tripoli coast.

YOU CAN BE ABSOLUTELY SURE OF VALUES

If you carefully read the store advertisements and follow them in your buying.

Merchants advertise certain lines because they know these lines will advertise their stores. Because there is something about certain goods, they are put in conspicuous places and the people are told about them. It may be the exclusiveness or newness of design, it may be an unusual quality, it may be an attractive price.

But there is at least one definite, sure reason why a merchant advertises an article and is willing to stake the reputation of his store upon it.

Therefore, when you see an article advertised in THE REVIEW, depend upon it, that article is good value, as good value as can be obtained in that particular store.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To The Editor of The Review.

Sir—It is high time we had a change somewhere in our Harvey Township or County Council. J. R. Stratton told them that the $3,000 liability and the up-keep of the Buckhorn Bridge was taken off their hands by the Laurier Government. Now the Hon G. P. Graham says it was not. The present Minister says that if Mr. Graham or the late Government will say that they ever intended to take the bridge and maintenance of it off our hands the present Government will carry out that agreement but Mr. Graham says that the late Government never intended to do anything of the kind. He point blank refuses to authorize the present Government to make any such statement about the intention of the late Government. The consequence is that the late government refuses to take this off our hands. A nice mess we are in. It will be the same with the drowned lands in Harvey. Some of these smart Alecs ought to be left at home. Anybody who is going to make a bargain ought to make it and not let it be no good as the present so-called agreements are

Yours,
"RATEPAYER."

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—We are not in the last half of April, and I see no preparation on behalf of our City Council to cope with the death dealing microbes to be found in our dusty streets, especially in the spring time. It is well known that these microbes are the cause of catarrh, sore eyes, sore throat, pneumonia and consumption. In some years the dust starts in March, which shows the necessity of having everything ready before this. It is a matter of vital importance to the well-being of the community. Our two boards of health (on paper) have an opportunity of doing something, and should bestir themselves to see that the Council should not, as in other years, neglect to have the streets watered at the very first appearance of the dust.

Yours truly,
PURE AIR.

LOCAL MAN EXPECTED FRIENDS WITH THE ARRIVAL OF THE TITANIC

Mr. Geo. W. Haley of Waterworks Department Received Letter From His Sister Asking That He Look After Mr. and Mrs. Wallowrth.

Mr. Geo. W. Haley, of the City Waterworks office is in very great uncertainty as to the fate of certain friends of his, who were to have sailed with the ill-fated "Titanic."

On Monday of this week, he received a letter from his sister in England telling him that Mr. and Mrs. Wallworth, who live in Derbyshire, near Sheffield, were coming on a visit to Canada, and asked him to see them during their stay in Toronto. "The letter also informed Mr. Haley of his friends' intentions to sail on the Titanic which was to leave Southampton on Wednesday.

Up to the present, a search for their names among the survivors has been fruitless, and Mr. Haley has received no word telling him that they did not sail by the lost ship. No complete passenger list of the second class travellers is available and he cannot be sure whether they have lost their lives with the thousand others who were drowned in the awful calamity or whether they remained in England to sail by another boat.

The names of Mr. and Mrs. Wallworth, who were to have visited New York, Toronto and Montreal, do not appear among the first class passengers, but Mr. Haley is confident that if they sailed on the "Titanic" they would travel in the second-class cabin. Unfortunately, the only printed list of second class passengers available only includes the names of those whose names begin with the letters between A and H, and therefore would not include the names of Mr. and Mrs. Wallworth, whether or not they were passengers on the vessel.

As, however, Mr. Haley does not know for certain that his friends took passage on the "Titanic" he can only hope that they have fortunately not been passengers on that ship and that their lives therefore were not endangered by the collision.

STUDENT FROM VENEZUELA IN TRAINING WITH DR. JOHNSTON

Dr Johnston, the Chambers street veterinary, has a young Venezuelan student training with him, who arrived in the city on Monday from Trinidad, Venezuela. The young fellow, whose name is V. de Boissiere, up till coming to Peterborough was associated with his brother, who holds the office of Government veterinary of Trinidad, and who graduated from the Ontario Veterinary College.

Dr. Johnston had a young veterinary named Cyril Steele with him three years ago, who after serving his apprenticeship was appointed veterinary at Granada. Dr. Steele continues to have his stationery ordered from the Review, through Dr. Johnston. Another student named Jacques Agoin, of Shikh, Egypt, also served his apprenticeship under Dr. Johnston three years ago.

ONLY ONE WOMAN SAVED WHEN LA BOURGOYNE SANK

Running at High Speed French Liner Struck British Steamer.

The greatest disaster in the record of modern ocean navigation is recorded to-day. The foundering of the Titanic will make a place in history beside the capsizing of the Royal George with "twice four hundred men," and the loss of the troopship Birkenhead one of the most dramatic events of the nineteenth century, when a detachment of British soldiers stood at attention on the deck of the sinking ship, while the boats took off the women and children aboard.

DEATH'S TOLL.

Other terrible tales of the toll that ocean takes of those who do business in great waters include the loss of the White Star steamer Atlantic off the coast of Nova Scotia in 1873, when 547 people were drowned, the few persons saved being rescued by fishermen on the cliffs; the sinking of the Princess Alice in the Thames in 1878, after a collision, with 700 souls on board; the loss of the Anchor liner Utopia off Gibraltar in 1891 by collision, when 574 immigrants were drowned, the sinking of La Bourgoyne, a French ocean liner, in 1898, with a loss of 580 lives, and the burning of the excursion steamer General Slocum off New York in 1904, when 1,400 people, including hundreds of children, perished by fire or threw themselves overboard and were drowned.

Sixty miles off Sable Island, on the morning of July 4, 1898, La Bourgoyne crashed into the British steamer Cromartyshire. The big French liner was sunk, and of over 600 passengers on board, less than a hundred survived to tell the tale.

The La Bourgoyne, running at a terrific rate of speed, struck the Cromartyshire on the port bow, and the French vessel sank almost before those on board knew what had happened.

Eye-witnesses of the dire tragedy said the Franch ship recoiled from the shock as though struck by a thunderbolt, then, amid the despairing shrieks of the trembling souls who had managed to gain the deck, sank to "Davy Jones' locker."

ONE WOMAN SAVED.

Only one woman was saved, Mrs. A. Lacasse, of Plainfield, N.J., who was rescued by the heroic efforts of her husband.

As the La Bourgoyne went down, three priests, who were among the passengers, calmly continued their giving absolution to the French and American Catholics who knelt at their feet.

As the big ship sank she sucked down everything on the surface near by, but those on the Cromartyshire saw, with horrible fascination, an eerie event which transpired soon after. When the suction ceased, about 200 bodies shot out of the water with a rush, as if the sea were giving up its dead, after swallowing the ship.

Awful as was the disaster, it would have been doubly as bad had the French ship struck the Cromarty ten feet further aft. In that case both vessels would have been sunk.

The Lift Lock was opened for the season of 1911 on May 9, but the lock will be in operation for this season at an earlier date.

A tug of the Baker Lumber Company was the first to pass through the Lindsay bridges yesterday, it proceeding to Port Perry for a tow of logs for the company. The first drive of logs for this year passed Scotts' Mills, back of Buckhorn, yesterday and came through to Deer Bay. The logs are for the Baker Lumber Company.

Hamilton, April 17—The city council of Moose Jaw has appointed Geo. W. Baines, of Owen Sound, chief of the fire department. There was keen competition among a number of the members of the local fire department and other places, but the Owen Sound man was the choice. The Hamilton men who applied were George Pedler, George Gimblett, John Smith, A. S. Kappel, W. A. Gilbert, William Walsh and Robert Wilson. W. A. Howard of Peterboro, and C. M. Brady, of Brockville, also applied.

ADVERTISEMENT FOR PETERBORO BY RAILWAYS

Now that the Canadian Pacific Railway has completed its new grain route from Port McNicholl, on Georgian Bay to Montreal, via Bethany Junction, Peterboro can shortly expect to see big train loads of grain passing through the city on their way to the Atlantic ports. At Port McNicholl it is stated that the C. P. R. has already a large amount of grain, stored in the elevators, and as soon as the lakes are navigable more grain will be brought down from the head of the Lakes to be forwarded to Montreal. It is just possible that in addition to the construction work at present be done in this city that the Canadian Pacific will have to put up several more buildings either here or at Bethany in order to provide facilities for the handling of the traffic over the new line.

At any rate the completion of this line will mean that a much heavier traffic will pass through Peterboro from now on.

Peterboro is gaining much valuable publicity through the railways this year. In the summer resort publications issued by the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railways a great deal of prominence is given this city and the Kawartha Lakes district. Photographs showing George street, Central Park, Victoria Park, and other features are appearing in the various railway publications, and other structures are appearing in various government booklets.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To The Editor of The Review.

Sir—It is high time we had a change somewhere in our Harvey Township or County Council. J. R. Stratton told them that the $8,000 liability and the up-keep of the Buckhorn Bridge was taken off their hands by the Laurier Government. Now the Hon G. P. Graham says it was not. The present Minister says that if Mr. Graham or the late Government will say that they ever intended to take the bridge and maintenance of it off our hands the present Government will carry out that agreement but Mr. Graham says that the late Government never intended to do anything of the kind. He point blank refuses to authorize the present Government to make any such statement about the intention of the late Government. The consequence is that the late government refuses to take this off our hands. A nice mess we are in. It will be the same with the drowned lands in Harvey. Some of these smart Alecs ought to be left at home. Anybody who is going to make a bargain ought to make it and not let it be no good as the present so-called agreements are.

Yours,
"RATEPAYER."

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—We are not in the last half of April, and I see no preparation on behalf of our City Council to cope with the death dealing microbes to be found in our dusty streets, especially in the spring time. It is well known that these microbes are the cause of catarrh, sore eyes, sore throat, pneumonia and consumption. In some years the dust starts in March, which shows the necessity of having everything ready before this. It is a matter of vital importance to the well-being of the community. Our two boards of health (on paper) have an opportunity of doing something, and should bestir themselves to see that the Council should not, as in other years, neglect to have the streets watered at the very first appearance of the dust.

Yours truly,
PURE AIR.

LOCAL MAN EXPECTED FRIENDS WITH THE ARRIVAL OF THE TITANIC

Mr. Geo. W. Haley of Waterworks Department Received Letter From His Sister Asking That He Look After Mr. and Mrs. Wallowrth.

Mr. Geo. W. Holey, of the City Waterworks office is in very great uncertainty as to the fate of certain friends of his, who were to have sailed with the ill-fated "Titanic."

On Monday of this week, he received a letter from his sister in England telling him that Mr. and Mrs. Wallworth, who live in Derbyshire, near Sheffield, were coming on a visit to Canada, and asked him to see them during their stay in Toronto. The letter also informed Mr. Haley of his friends' intentions to sail on the Titanic, which was to leave Southampton on Wednesday.

Up to the present, a search for their names among the survivors has been fruitless, and Mr. Haley has received no word telling him that they did not sail by the lost ship. No complete passenger list of the second class travellers is available and he cannot be sure whether they have lost their lives with the thousand others who were drowned in the awful calamity or whether they remained in England to sail by another boat.

The names of Mr. and Mrs. Walworth, who were to have visited New York, Toronto and Montreal, do not appear among the first class passengers, but Mr. Haley is confident that if they sailed on the "Titanic" they would travel in the second-class cabin.

Unfortunately, the only printed list of second class passengers available only includes the names of those whose names begin with the letters between A and H, and therefore would not include the names of Mr. and Mrs. Wallworth, whether or not they were passengers on the vessel.

As, however, Mr. Haley does not know for certain that his friends took passage on the "Titanic" he can only hope that they have fortunately not been passengers on that ship and that their lives therefore were not endangered by the collision.

STUDENT FROM VENEZUELA IN TRAINING WITH DR. JOHNSTON

Dr. Johnston, the Chambers street veterinary, has a young Venezuelan student training with him, who arrived in the city on Monday from Trinidad, Venezuela. The young fellow, whose name is V. de Boissiere, up till coming to Peterborough was associated with his brother, who holds the office of Government veterinary of Trinidad, and who graduated from the Ontario Veterinary College.

Dr. Johnston had a young veterinary named Cyril Steele with him three years ago, who after serving his apprenticeship was appointed veterinary at Granada. Dr. Steele continues to have his stationery ordered from the Review, through Dr. Johnston. Another student named Jacques Agoin, of Shikh, Egypt, also served his apprenticeship under Dr. Johnston three years ago.

ONLY ONE WOMAN SAVED WHEN LA BOURGOYNE SANK

Running at High Speed French Liner Struck British Steamer.

The greatest disaster in the record of modern ocean navigation is recorded to-day. The foundering of the Titanic will make a place in history beside the capsizing of the Royal George with "twice four hundred men," and the loss of the troopship Birkenhead one of the most dramatic events of the nineteenth century, when a detachment of British soldiers stood at attention on the deck of the sinking ship, while the boats took off the women and children aboard.

DEATH'S TOLL.

Other terrible tales of the toll that ocean takes of those who do business in great waters include the loss of the White Star steamer Atlantic off the coast of Nova Scotia in 1873, when 547 people were drowned, the few persons saved being rescued by fishermen on the cliffs; the sinking of the Princess Alice in the Thames in 1878, after a collision, with 700 souls on board; the loss of the Anchor liner Utopia off Gibraltar in 1891 by collision, when 574 immigrants were drowned, the sinking of La Bourgoyne, a French ocean liner, in 1898, with a loss of 580 lives, and the burning of the excursion steamer General Slocum off New York in 1904, when 1,400 people, including hundreds of children, perished by fire or threw themselves overboard and were drowned.

Sixty miles off Sable Island, on the morning of July 4, 1898, La Bourgoyne crashed into the British steamer Cromartyshire. The big French liner was sunk, and of over 600 passengers on board, less than a hundred survived to tell the tale.

The La Bourgoyne, running at a terrific rate of speed, struck the Cromartyshire on the port bow, and the French vessel sank almost before those on board knew what had happened.

Eye-witnesses of the dire tragedy said the Franch ship recoiled from the shock as though struck by a thunderbolt, then, amid the despairing shrieks of the trembling souls who had managed to gain the deck, sank to "Davy Jones' locker."

ONE WOMAN SAVED.

Only one woman was saved, Mrs. A. Lacasse, of Plainfield, N.J., who was rescued by the heroic efforts of her husband.

As the La Bourgoyne went down three priests, who were among the passengers, calmly continued their giving absolution to the French and American Catholics who knelt at their feet.

As the big ship sank she sucked down everything on the surface near by, but those on the Cromartyshire saw, with horrible fascination, an eerie event which transpired soon after When the suction ceased, about 200 bodies shot out of the water with a rush, as if the sea were giving up its dead, after swallowing the ship.

Awful as was the disaster, it would have been doubly as bad had the French ship struck the Cromarty ten feet further aft. In that case both vessels would have been sunk.

LIFT LOCK TO OPEN EARLIER THAN LAST YEAR

The Lift Lock was opened for the season of 1911 on May 9, but the lock will be in operation for this season at an earlier date.

A tug of the Baker Lumber Company was the first to pass through the Lindsy bridges yesterday, it proceeding to Port Perry for a tow of logs for the company. The first drive of logs for this year passed Scotts' Mills, back of Buckhorn, yesterday and came through to Deer Bay. The logs are for the Baker Lumber Company.

LOCAL FIRE CHIEF APPLIED FOR JOB AT MOOSE JAW

Hamilton, April 17—The city council of Moose Jaw has appointed Geo. W. Baines, of Owen Sound, chief of the fire department. There was keen competition among a number of the members of the local fire department and other places, but the Owen Sound man was the choice. The Hamilton men who applied were George Pedler, George Gimblett, John Smith, A. S. Kappele, W. A. Gilbert, William Walsh and Robert Wilson. W. A. Howard of Peterboro, and C. M. Brady, of Brockville, also applied.

ADVERTISEMENT FOR PETERBORO BY RAILWAYS

Now that the Canadian Pacific Railway has completed its new grain route from Port McNicholl, on Georgian Bay to Montreal, via Bethany Junction, Peterboro can shortly expect to see big train loads of grain passing through the city on their way to the Atlantic ports. At Port McNicholl it is stated that the C. P. R. has already a large amount of grain, stored in the elevators, and as soon as the lakes are navigable more grain will be brought down from the head of the Lakes to be forwarded to Montreal. It is just possible that in addition to the construction work at present be done in this city that the Canadian Pacific will have to put up several more buildings either here or at Bethany in order to provide facilities for the handling of the traffic over the new line.

At any rate the completion of this line will mean that a much heavier traffic will pass through Peterboro from now on.

Peterboro is gaining much valuable publicity through the railways this year. In the summer resort publications issued by the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railways a great deal of prominence is given this city and the Kawartha Lakes district. Photographs showing George street, Central Park, Victoria Park, and other features are appearing in the various railway publications, and other structures are appearing in various government booklets.

FURNITURE WAS SCATTERED AND DAMAGED IN RUNAWAy

Just before going to press a spectacular though short-lived runaway occurred on Hunter street, D. Belleghem's delivery horse being responsible for the untimely display. The animal attached to the delivery wagon loaded with furniture was being driven out of Belleghem's laneway. The beast evidently took fright at something and tore across the road and into Long's hotel yard, scattering the load of household furniture of chairs, tables, etc., all across the road. Some were badly smashed. The nag was caught without any trouble. The driver's escape was almost miraculous, as he was down between the shafts and the seat, during the runaway. He escaped without injury beyond a little shaking up.

REAL ESTATE CHANGES ARE MADE AT NORWOOD

Special Correspondence.

Norwood, April 16.—The water in the creek is up to high water mark now and likely to go still higher. No danger from flood is anticipated as Mr. Pakenham has the situation at the dam well in hand.

A real estate deal of considerable importance is being negotiated at present, and it is expected that two of our progressive citizens will acquire the vacant lots on the corner of Peterborough and Colborne streets from the R. W. Reynolds estate. If the deal goes through it is the intention of those purchasing to erect a block of stores. Mr. John Basking also intends erecting his new hotel fronting on Colborne street, he having purchased the property from Mr. John Weir, on which formerly stood the King Hotel.

Mr. Napoleon Reynolds, a life long citizen of this community, passed away at his home on Belmont street on Sunday of this week of typhoid fever. Mr. Reynolds took down about three weeks ago, and from the first his condition was seen to be critical. The attending physician did all in his power to ward off the fell destroyer but without avail. Deceased was fifty-five years of age and leaves a wife and one daughter, Mrs. John Rathwell, of this village to mourn his loss.

On Tuesday of last week the C.P.R. had men placed on the two village crossings counting the number of pedestrians and vehicles crossing the tracks. On account of the inclemency of the weather and the very unfavorable conditions of the roads the traffic was very small and could not give anything near an estimate of the average traffic going into and leaving the village.

The auction sale of household furniture held last Saturday afternoon by Mr. J. S. Juniac was well attended and bidding was brisk. Prices generally were very satisfactory. Mr. Juniac is leaving Norwood in the near future.

The household furniture and effects of the estate of the late David Foster were sold by public auction on Tuesday afternoon.

Quite a severe electric storm passed over the village on Monday afternoon this week. Considerable rain fell but no damage from lightning was done.

The High and Public Schools reopened after the Easter holidays with a good attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. John Christie, of Asphodel, intend moving into Norwood in the near future. Before leaving their home in Asphodel their friends and neighbors gathered and presented them with two handsome chairs and a purse, together with a nicely worded address, expressing regret at their removal and wishing them a peaceful and happy sojourn in Norwood during the declining years.

NEW ARMORIES.

Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., of East Peterborough, was in Norwood last Saturday. He is hopeful of procuring sufficient Government aid for the proposed armories and drill hall for Norwood as to make the project a reality in the not distant future.

CANNING FACTORY.

That Norwood is going to have a canning factory is almost a certainty. Arrangements for its inception are practically complete. Only a few details require adjustment, and as soon as the four thousand dollars is subscribed by the citizens the work will be commenced. There apparently will be no difficulty in securing the required amount of produce required to keep the factory running at full capacity during the season, as the farmers have responded heartily, and already more than enough acreage is promised to produce at an average crop sufficiently vegetables for the first year's output. It is not the intention to put up any fruit this season, but the plant will be extended to handle all kinds of farm and garden fruit and vegetables, as circumstances warrant. The operations this year, we understand, will be confined to tomatoes, beans and pumpkins, with possibly corn and peas.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Marks passed away on Saturday of last week, aged 11 days. Mr. and Mrs. Marks have the sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement.

Mrs. C. J. Searight is visiting her daughter, Mrs. I. D. Moore, in Peterborough.

Miss Belle Howson has returned after visiting at her home in Keene.

Mr. Howard Saunders has returned to Ann Arbor, Mich., after spending the week in town, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Searight.

Miss Annie Kelly has returned to her home in Peterborough, after visiting with her brother, Rev. P. J. Kelly.

Miss Beatrice Lamb spent the holiday at her home in Marmora.

Mr. W. J. Miller, manager of the Bank of Toronto, spent Sunday in Havelock.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Trenouth have returned from spending the holiday with friends in Bowmanville.

Miss Eva Patterson visited Toronto last week.

Montreal, April 17.—Several people left here last night to meet the Carpathia, among them being Dr. F. C. Outlook In China.

Toronto, April 17.—Rev. T. E. Shore yesterday received a cable from Rev. J. Kilburn, Chenter, China, in answer to an enquiry from the Methodist mission executive here regarding the political situation. Dr. Kilburn replied: "Government weak, position uncertain. Affairs not yet settled. Not likely to be worse."

Rev. C. R. Carscallen and wife, who came on furlough, from Chenter, in consequence of the uprising, spent the past two days in Toronto, and have gone to their home in Dresden.

Will Reject Italy's Terms.

Constantinople, April 17.—The representatives of the foreign powers took the first step to endeavor to bring about mediation between Turkey and Italy yesterday, when an identical note was presented to the Turkish Foreign Minister, Assim Bey, at his private residence.

The substance of the communication is that, having ascertained the Italian conditions of peace, the powers desire to know Turkey's terms.

Assim Bey asked for time to formulate his reply, which is practically certain to be that Turkey declines to enter into negotiations on the basis of the Italian pretensions.

HAPPY IN THEIR SUCCESS

St. George's Choral Society Dined at Coleman's

The St. George's Choral Society wound up at Coleman's parlors at the conclusion of their successful concert last evening, where they indulged in an informal and generous spread supplied by Mr. Coleman. After disposing of the fare a number of nice things were said by leading members of the organization in reference to the success of the first concert, some of these being directed at the energetic conductor, Mr. E. Thompson.

Dr. Park also praised the society for the success they had plainly scored. A few choruses were sung, after which the happy choristers dispersed with the singing of the National Anthem.

You Are on the Bench

YOU—the Public—are the judge. On your good opinion and your good word depends the success of the advertised article. For no amount of advertising will induce you to buy a second time what you do not like. No advertising will offset the bad effect of a dissatisfied buyer.

That is why advertisers must and do maintain the quality of their goods.

Advertisers realize that to turn their outlay for advertising into profit they must give good value.

They are not looking for one-time sales. First sales, in most cases, would not pay for the advertising.

To be successful, they must make steady customers. So, quality is being put in to hold the trade that advertising produces.

Thus, to be sure of quality, one naturally turns to goods that are advertised. And isn't it only reasonable?

No manufacturer can afford to advertise for long an inferior article. From the moment the advertising begins, the quality must either be kept uniform or improved—to go back means ruin.

The day is passing when you ask for a pint of pickles. You name the brand.

You don't ask for Rolled Oats. You name the brand you prefer.

The unknown article may be good, but you are not so sure of it as you are of the advertised article, which bears the seal of quality, —a well known maker's trade name.

TO MANUFACTURERS

You who make good goods and do not advertise—show your confidence in your product.
Advertise it.
Let the public know that you stand back of your goods to maintain their high quality.

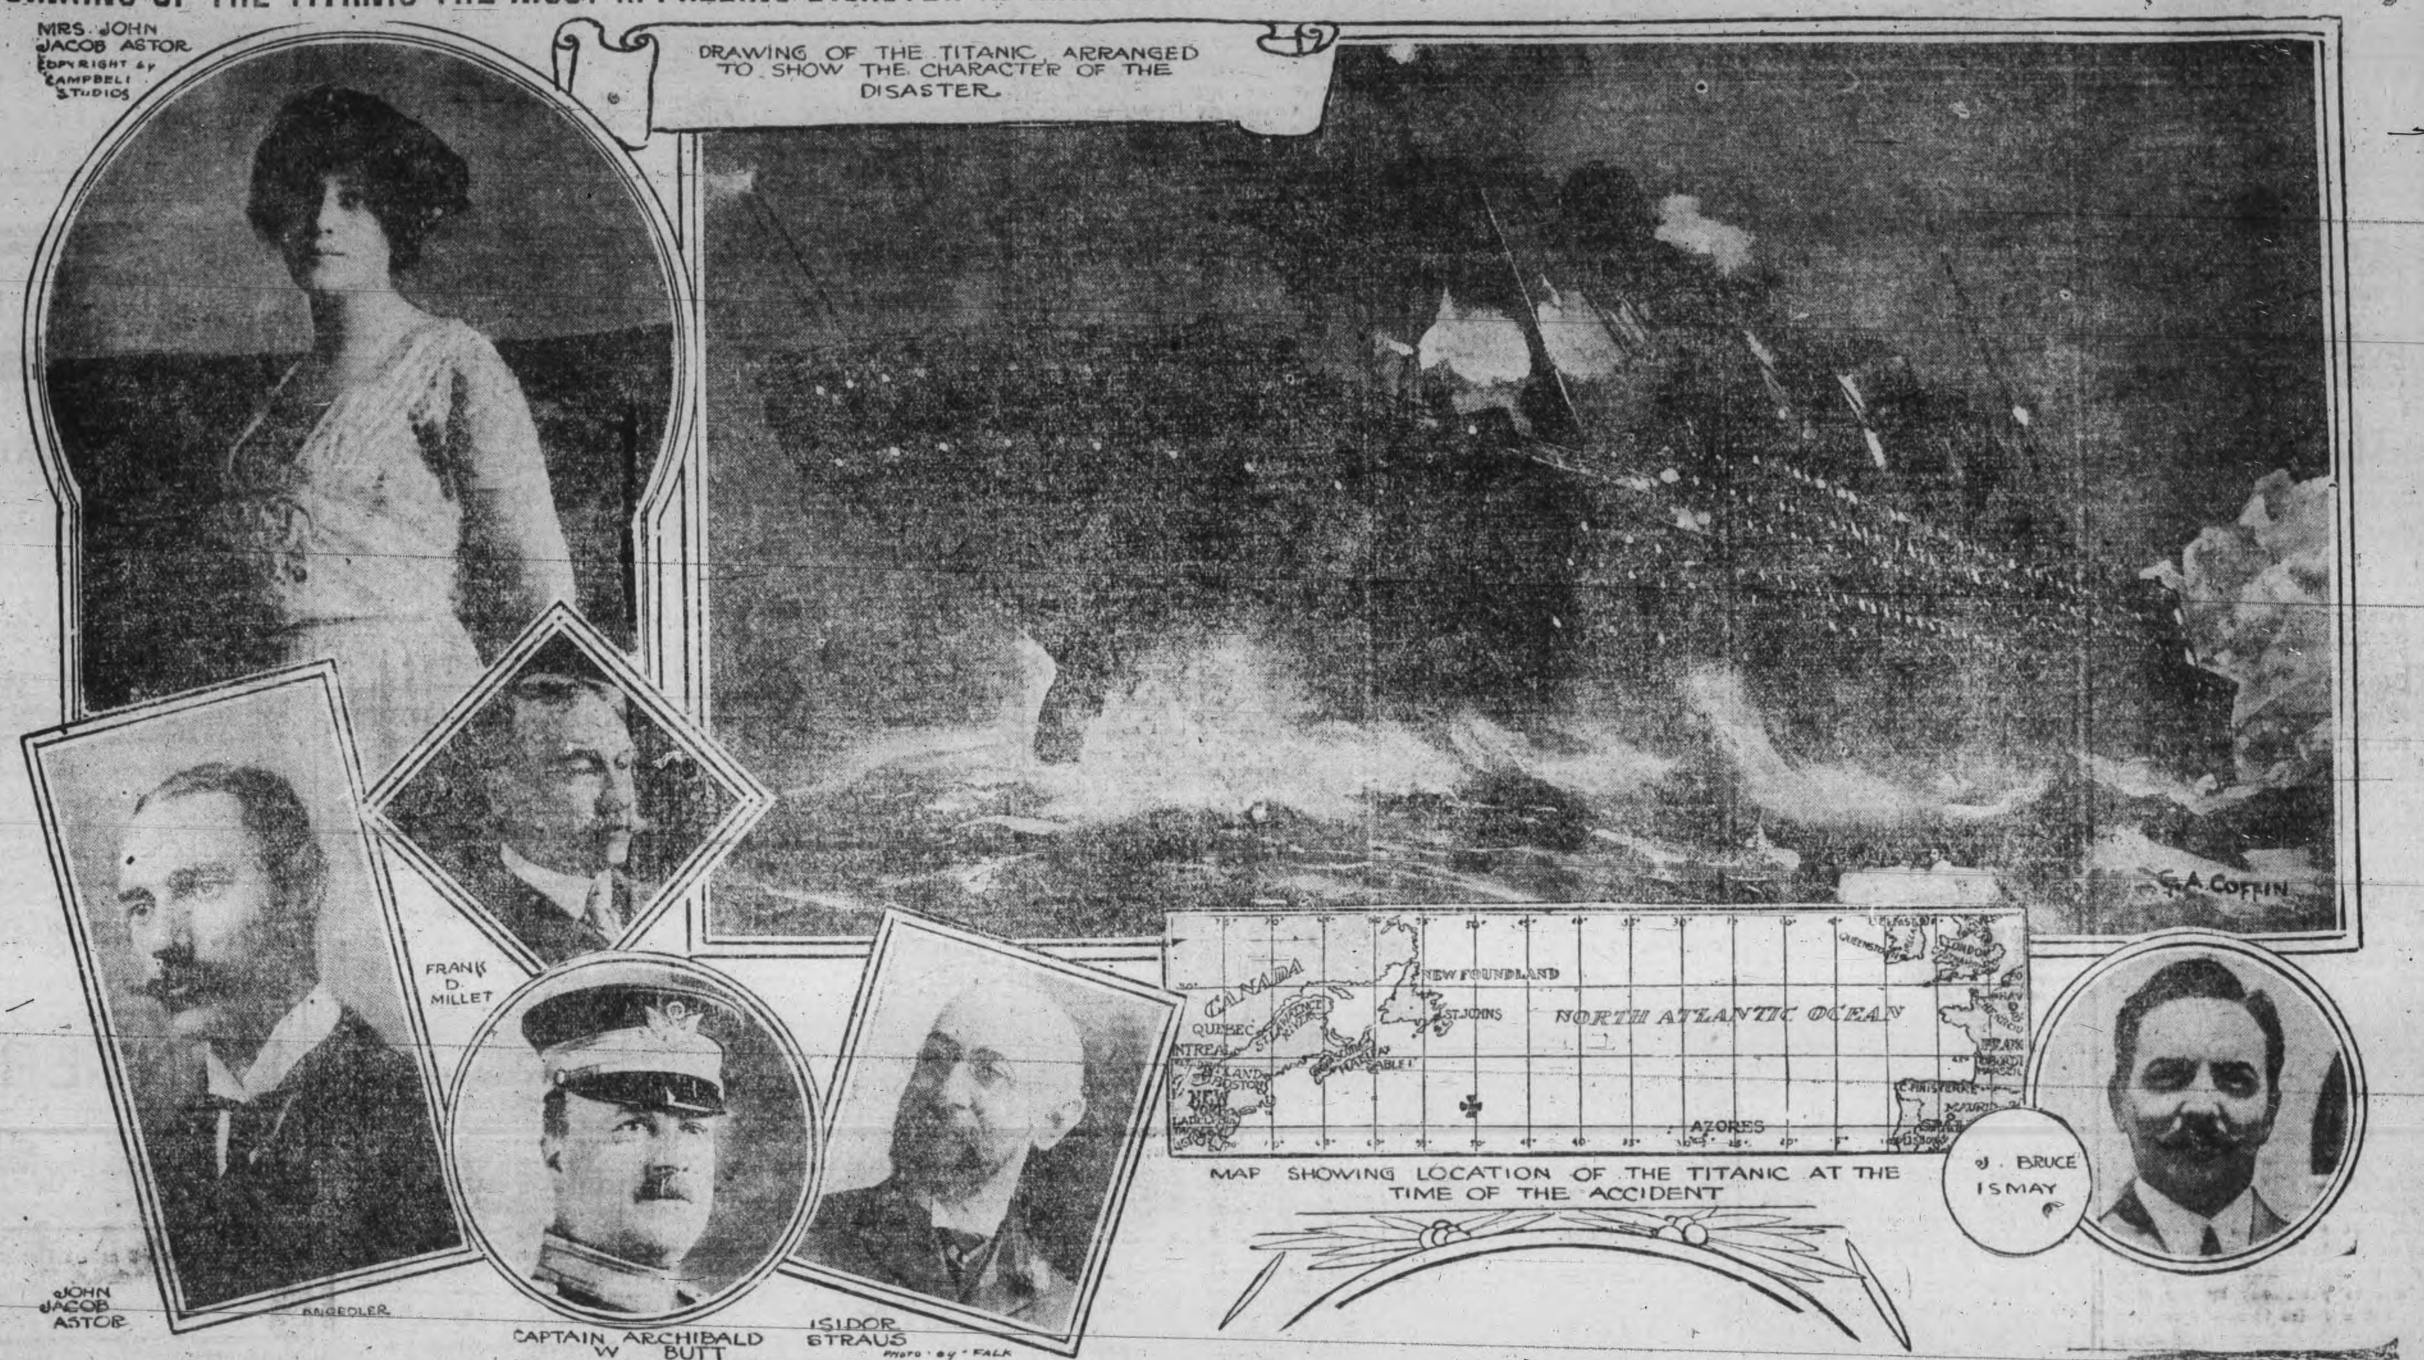
SINKING OF THE TITANIC THE MOST APPALLING DISASTER IN MARINE HISTORY--SOME OF THE PROMINENT PASSENGERS ON BOARD VESSEL.



The most appalling disaster in marine history occurred when the gigantic White Star steamship Titanic sank to the bottom of the sea following a collision with an iceberg off Cape Race. Scores of the world's most widely known persons were among the passengers, including Colonel John Jacob Astor and his wife, William T. Stead, Isidor Straus, Captain Archibald W. Butt, aide to President Taft, and hundreds of others equally well known. The first despatches reported that only four hundred passengers were saved from the ill fated vessel, while more than a thousand persons are believed to have perished. One point is known from which may be derived a sad satisfaction. In a desperate situation where the salvation of all was not possible the women and children were cared for first. These were sent away in the first of the boats launched from the sinking ship, the only boats apparently which did not share the fate of the mammoth vessel.

PLACING THE BLAME FOR THE DISASTER; PREPARATIONS FOR LANDING OF RESCUED

Bruce Ismay, Managing Director of White Star Line, Being Connected With the Speed of the Ship and Censorship of Wireless Messages--Carpathia Reports and is Expected to Dock To-night.

Only Relatives and Press Correspondents to be Allowed on the Docks.

SPECIAL TO THE REVIEW.

New York, N.Y., Ap. 18—There is a disposition in some quarters to make Bruce Ismay, managing director of White Star line, the scapegoat for the Titanic disaster. There is every evidence, it is believed, that he is responsible for the censorship of wireless despatches from the Carpathia. The Scout Cruiser Chester reported officially to Washington to-day that when the Chester's wireless operator asked the Carpathia for a story of the disaster it was curtly refused. Messages from survivors to their relatives are uniformly worded, indicating that all were penned by the same hand and simply announcing that the sender was safe. It is also believed that Captain Smith was acting under Ismay's orders in trying to establish a new speed record and that he rushed through the ice field at high speed when he should have slowed down.

New York, April 18.—The Carpathia reported at ten o'clock this morning and was seventy-five miles east by south of Block Island. White Star Line offices have posted notices that the Carpathia is expected to dock to-night. Every arrangement has been made to expedite the landing of survivors. Only relatives and Press Association correspondents will be permitted on the dock. The former are being grouped in alphabetical sections in order to minimize confusion. By Mayor Gaynor's orders the streets in the vicinity will be roped off by the police and all photographers will be rigidly barred.

RAY OF HOPE THAT HAYS IS SAFE

Montreal, April 18—The Grand Trunk Railway Company this morning received a telegram, reading, "Mrs. Hays and Mrs. Davidson safe no news of husband," signed Hays." It came from the Carpathia via Woodshole, Mass., wireless station and while it revived a faint hope that Hays himself was the sender it is also construed to have been sent by Mrs. Hays, and to mean no word of her husband. It is also possible that the last letter dropped from word "husbands" and that both Hays and Thornton Davidson were referred to. The New York Tribune's revised list of survivors gives Davidson's name among those saved, but the White Star offices here do not confirm.

WHY MORE PASSENGERS WERE NOT SAVED

Brandt Rock, Mass., April 18—Brief wireless messages from the Carpathia, received here, gave the first definite information of the Titanic's last plunge. The passengers were being put into life-boats when the great vessel went down carrying some of the life-boats with it and it was impossible to get off all the passengers that could be accommodated before the Titanic sank forever.

MORGAN IS 75

Florence, Italy, April 18.—J. Pierpont Morgan yesterday received on the occasion of his 75th birthday an avalanche of telegrams and letters of congratulation from all parts of the world. The messages include several from European Sovereigns and Rulers.

Paris Saw the Eclipse.

Paris, April 18.—The eclipse of the sun was observed yesterday by many scientists. Shortly before noon, a pall of obscurity resembling the approach of a thunder storm descended over the city and the atmosphere became greenish dark.

In the city itself the eclipse was not quite total, the crescent of the sun showing at its climax at 12.10 after which the sun rapidly emerged.

Fourteen at Shelter

The Children's Shelter is being overhauled and put into good shape, by means of re-papering and painting. There are fourteen children in the Home at present.

INDICATIONS POINT TO MAD RUSH

New York, April 18.—The roll of the saved from the Titanic disaster seems complete.

Practically every attending circumstance in the transmission of news from the Carpathia goes to show that only 328 of the 610 cabin passengers of the Titanic are safe on the rescue ship.

The 282 cabin passengers whose names have not appeared in the lists sent ashore Tuesday by wireless must probably be conceded as numbered among the 1,312 lives which the collision of the mammoth new steamer with an iceberg off the Newfoundland Banks Sunday night is believed to have taken.

Thousands of hopeful hearts were turned to despairing ones when the United States scout cruiser Chester wirelessed ashore late yesterday that she had been in communication with the Carpathia and had asked repeatedly for the full list of the first and second cabin survivors, and that the rescue ship reported that all the names had already been sent ashore.

The remainder of 340 persons saved were passengers in the steerage or members of the crew.

After the strain of three days' waiting without news of their missing ones, there were few of the hopeful that still held out against the seemingly final word as to the fate of friends and relatives.

The small remaining hopes of the persistently hopeful few among the relatives and friends of passengers rested last night on the faint possibility that the list of named survivors sent by wireless from the rescue ship Carpathia, might after all not be quite complete.

Judging by the number of names of foreign men in the list of survivors from the Titanic, it appears that British discipline may not have been able to hold in check the frantic rush of foreigners in the third-class and steerage to escape to the lifeboats.

The list, as received by wireless from the Carpathia last night, while in it the names of women predominate, shows a significantly large percentage of men. Surprise was freely expressed that so many aliens should have survived while men of world-wide reputation have gone down with the steamer.

The accepted belief has been that, after the women and children were put aboard the boats, first cabin passengers would have somewhat of a preference over those of second and third-class quarters, but the Carpathia's messages showing survivors among the first cabin passengers indicate that only compartively few men made their way to safety.

A well-known marine man said last night: "I am unable to understand why W. T. Stead, John Jacob Astor, Benjamin Guggenheim, G. D. Widener and Charles M. Hays perished while so many Russians, Poles and Macedonians and others, including one or two Chinamen, were taken aboard the lifeboats. It looks to me as if the officers were unable to stem the mad rush, and as though it were a veritable scramble for life."

From the Carpathia came a new report during yesterday as to the number of survivors on board.

Through the Cunarder Franconia, which established wireless communication with the rescue ship, came a message which included this statement:

"She has a total of 705 survivors aboard."

The previous statement from the Carpathia had been that she carried 868 survivors. It may be that the report received through the Franconia included a count of rescued passengers only, disregarding the 100 or more members of the crew, who must have been in the boats which the Carpathia picked up, their presence being necessary for the safety of the passengers.

More Canadians Lost.

London, April 18.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—John Sage, who came from Saskatchewan three months ago to fetch his wife and nine children, is believed to have perished with the whole family on the Titanic.

Another Canadian who probably lost his life is F. H. Marjery, Moosejaw, who, with his wife, was a third-class passenger. Mrs. Margery is reported last night among the saved.

Another of the Titanic victims is E. G. Crosby, a Canadian, living in Milwaukee. His wife was saved.

Austin Parner, another passenger, was a director of the Western Canada Investment Trust, and was traveling to Ottawa.

Gustave Leseur is believed to belong to Albert street, Ottawa.

Parisian Captain Kept Mum.

Halifax, April 18.—The captain of the Parisian, which arrived yesterday, declined to make any comment on the loss of the Titanic other than to say the liner could not have been struck head-on, but sideways, inflicting much more terrible damage than the mere smashing in of the forward bulkheads.

It is a remarkable thing that the only men on the Parisian who knew of the accident to the Titanic were the captain and the Marconi operator. None of the officers besides these two and not a single passenger knew that the Titanic was lost till they entered Halifax harbor and learned the tragic news.

After landing passengers and cargo the Parisian proceeded to St. John.

Iceberg 400 Feet High.

Washington, D.C., April 18.—The iceberg which caused the Titanic disaster was a giant, one-quarter to half a mile in length, rising 400 feet out of the water, according to the confident belief of Government marine officers, based upon reports just received here.

PROBABILITIES

BEATTIE NESBITT'S COUNSEL IN CONFERENCE WITH OFFICIALS

St. George's Banquet Postponed.

New York, April 18.—The regular banquet of the St. George Society that is held in this city every year on April 23 (St. George's Day) has been indefinitely postponed on account of the fact that so many members of the society have lost friends on board the Titanic.

Burglars Sent Down.

Brockville, April 18.—Esford Davis and Harold Nelson, two Gananoque young men, who burglarized the offices of the Ontario Wheel Works of that place recently, were given six months in the central prison by Judge Reynolds.

CHILD WAS MUCH ABUSED

Cornwall, April 18.—The trial of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Bickford of Winchester, accused of manslaughter, opened at the spring assizes here yesterday afternoon before Justice Kelley. Both pleaded not guilty to causing the death of Mrs. Bickford's 11-year-old niece, Kathleen St. Pierre, on Feb. 26.

The principal witnesses were Dr. McLaughlin and Dr. Malloch, who had conducted the post-mortem. Dr. McLaughlin said that on the night of Feb. 26 Bickford came to his office and told him the girl had a weak spell. He went over at once and found her dead. He noticed a severe bruise running under the eye, across and behind the ear. He did not think this was more than 48 hours old. There were other bruises and he refused to give a death certificate.

An inquest was subsequently held, and he conducted the post-mortem examination. The stomach was healthy, but practically empty. Besides the big bruise on the head, there was another severe one under the chin. On the body and limbs there were three or four bruises, abrasions and discolorations, some fresh, some partly healed and some old. The skin was knocked off the shins, evidently by some blunt instrument. The feet had been frozen. The skin had parted from the tissue of both heels, also from most of the toes, which had lost the nails, and some of them considerable tissue. Two showed the bones protruding.

Dr. Malloch corroborated Dr. McLaughlin's evidence of the post-mortem.

The court adjourned until to-day.

H. H. Dewart Says His Client Will Forego Extradition.

Toronto, April 18.—Extradition depositions were completed upon at least three charges against Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, before Provincial Magistrate Joseph E. Rogers, at the Attorney-General's Department yesterday. These were the original charge of forgery, which has been amended, and upon two other charges in connection with the funds of the defunct Farmers' Bank. Just what is the nature of these latter two charges will be made known by Magistrate Rogers this afternoon. It is understood that they are in connection with alleged thefts from the funds of the bank.

At the close of the hearing, H. H. Dewart, K.C., counsel for the doctor, was closeted in conference with Acting Attorney-General Sir James Whitney, Deputy Attorney-General Cartwright and Magistrate Rogers. The conference concerned a proposition put by Mr. Dewart in a letter to the Deputy Attorney-General, in which he offered to have Dr. Nesbitt return provided he was not called upon to face more than the original charge of forgery, but with the understanding that should the crown desire to press further charges, it might be done if the doctor were allowed a chance to return to Chicago.

In the letter Mr. Dewart said he was "renewing" a previous proposal made before the taking of evidence was begun to have the doctor waive extradition. He pointed out that the doctor's return would allow of his being called as a witness before the royal commission now investigating the affairs of the Farmers' Bank. The fact has already been published that negotiations were on foot before his arrest to have him come back under the protection of this commission, to give evidence before it. It is said that it was by tracing the correspondence in this connection that the police were enabled to locate the doctor in Chicago. The fact that they believed that they would be able to do so, led to the breaking off of these negotiations and to the long adjournment of the sittings of the commission to allow them to effect the arrest.

Inspector Rogers said last night that the parties at the conference were unable to arrive at an agreement, and that the conference was finally concluded with matters at the same point as when it was opened. It is none the less confidently declared by men closely in touch with the situation that Dr. Nesbitt will return to the city to face any and all charges against him.

THE TITANIC TRAGEDY

Later details of the Titanic disaster seem to show that the huge vessel had a most inadequate number of life-boats. There were 120, which could accommodate only 700 people. The designer of the Titanic in the course of an interview said that he did not think that the large ocean steamers carried nearly enough boats. He said that the Titanic was fitted for at least four times the number of boats that the company had fitted the ship with. The Titanic carried fifty per cent. more boats than were required by the Board of Trade rules, but the number was quite insufficient. This was not due to parsimony by the company, but a desire to save space and top weight. That there will be stricter regulation of the life-boat business seems to be certain, since it is assured that if there had been enough boats all of the passengers would have been saved, and most of the crew.

It would also seem as if a limit had been reached in the size of the great hulks. The Titanic and the Olympic are such great vessels that when they have attained considerable speed, they travel for two miles with engines full astern before stopping. The icebergs are so often enveloped in fog, and are submerged to such an extent, that a great liner might well hit one even before it could be stopped or even veered from its course. The icebergs are sometimes two and three blocks long, and seven-eighths of their bulk is under water. The fact that even the Titanic was rent from stem to stern is not surprising when the tremendous mass of ice is considered in this light. No steamer on the great blue ocean could stand before the impact.

One of the reprehensible features of the sad accident was the fakery exhibited in the dispatches sent out to the newspapers after the catastrophe. The dispatches said that all on board were saved, and that the Titanic, though crippled, was being towed to Halifax. The circumstantial detail with which the story came mislead the readers of the newspapers, and the newspapers themselves. How far it was from the facts of case has been only too well demonstrated. It was about on a par with the story of the Pope's death, which the Hearst papers in the United States described with all the sad weeps and tears that prolific writers could command. But these are mere incidents in the story of the greatest marine wreck of history. The facts, as they come to light, seem to show that Captain Smith knew of his danger, but was under orders to make the fastest time possible to New York. He was forced to take a chance with the icebergs, and in this one case that chance was fatal. It was the last voyage of the veteran captain, who had reached the age of retirement. He is said to have remarked, when he commanded the Olympic that the boats were carrying too few life-boats, and it is probable that were he alive, to be placed on the witness stand, it would be found that he was not particularly to blame. To the millionaires who had clustered on the boat, must be given credit for their determination to see that the women and children had first chance to the boats. There was no distinction between class and wealth at the final hour. The rich man faced his doom like the third-class passenger. The stories that have come over the wireless seem to confirm the first impression, that the unwritten law of the sea was firmly enforced by the captain and crew, and backed by the majority of the men on board.

THE HOME WORK INCUBUS

Mr. Mowat, Inspector for the city for the public schools, and who is most efficient and thoughtful, calls the attention of the Review to what he claims is a statement not in accordance with the facts, in that the Review wrote of the prevalence of home work tasks in the schools of the city, as if such tasks were levied on pupils of the public schools, as well as on those attending the Institute. Mr. Mowat is right, and the correction is cheerfully made. The home work to public school pupils is not excessive, in fact limited to few classes and not at all in the lower grades. It is in the Collegiate Institute that it is carried to its perfection.

Nor is it the fault of the teachers. Many deplore such impositions. They have certain regulations to follow. There are certain percentages resulting from examinations to show the proficiency attained or not. It is all a part of a system that seeks to show results on a fictiteous foundation.

No one doubts the refining influences of many of the studies prosecuted in the Institute. More often than not all the information, the knowledge that a boy or girl will gain of subjects outside of the branches of an English education is gained in the Collegiate. After all, most of it—to the large number—who do not hope to follow a profession it is only a varnish. The complexity of studies, forced on the pupil distracts from real mental progress and assimilation.

If we were to prepare an equal number of foods to that of studies, and insist of their being partaken of at each meal every day, indigestion of a serious character would follow. And in just some such way, mental indigestion is a result of a promiscuous menu of studies.

It is regretful to say that there is no greater obstacle to making good mechanics than the Collegiate Institutes. The country is crying for intelligent, bright workmen capable of taking responsibility. This means that a Collegiate education is invaluable. The known results are that any boy who has been through the Institute disdains to become a mechanic, he is only fit for a profession. We send abroad, we go to the States to find intelligent shop foremen, handlers of work and handlers of men, while our own boys who should be in the race are dallying with a profession already overcrowded. And yet we should about our marvellous industrial progress, and the magnificent opportunities. The progress and opportunity seem to be availed of by any but ourselves.

ROOSEVELT'S CHANCES

The result of the Pennsylvania primaries in declaring almost unanimously for Roosevelt is astonishing. There is not much else to be said. Certainly, the campaign of the president for re-nomination has received a most tremendous set-back, for Pennsylvania and Illinois are two of the leading states, gauges by which the temper of the ordinary voter is tested. The result also is a direct testimony of the worth of the direct primary. Under the old machine methods, the leaders of the parties selected their men, and the people were left to vote for the greater or the lesser evil as they choose. Under the direct primary system, however, the bosses are set aside, and the voters of the party pronounce on what man they want as candidate. That Roosevelt would triumph in a majority of the states of the union, if public opinion were given free sway, there does not seem much room for doubt, in the light of recent occurrences. The newspapers are generally opposed to him. They are lined up with the Conservative forces. Certainly, Taft seemed a week ago to be leading with a lead like Tom Longboat used to get on his competitors, when he was in his prime.

The battle for the Republican nomination is becoming much more interesting. If Ohio, Taft's home state, goes Roosevelt also, it will certainly be a signal that Taft cannot be re-elected, and the choice will fall on either a third man, or on Roosevelt.

The latter would not get the support of many Conservative Republicans, but he would probably be able to gain much support from the more Conservative Democrats, were the Dems to nominate a weak man. The political situation is expected to develop much financial disturbance, if Roosevelt seems on the way to the top, for his advocacy of the popular recall of judges strikes at the root of a system by which big business has been enabled to clutch the masses by the throat, and choke them into impotence.

NOTE AND COMMENT

Scientists say that every adult person contains enough phosphorus to make four thousand ordinary matches. If this is so there is an awful lot of good fuel going to waste and coal so dear too.

Lumbermen, who are breaking up housekeeping in the primeval forest and coming down to civilization say that when the real spring thaw takes place that there will be floods in current.

A great thing to do is to clean up as you go. A flour mill man of Milwaukee was attacked and robbed of $1,275 in greenbacks, but the robbers overlooked $1,300 in silver which he had in his trouser's pocket. It would seem as if he had held it all in silver he might not have lost a cent. The robbers might have mistaken the package for a cook stove. The advocates of dollar silver coinage for Canada will please take notice.

A Nova Scotia preacher, annoyed by snoring in church, threatened to take away the pews held by the snorees. The committee to whom the riparian rights of the case was submitted decided that so long as the pew rent was paid, the lessee could sleep and snore, if he choose. The committee also intimated that there was no reflection on the inability of the preacher to keep his congregation awake. Simply a case of late business hours on Saturday night.

MONTREAL, April 17.—At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market, the receipts for the week ending April 13 were 550 cattle, 125 sheep and lambs, 400 hogs and 1750 calves. An active trade was done and the undertone to the market was strong, but prices showed no important change.

The tone of the market for hogs continues to be very strong and prices have scored a further advance of 10c to 15c per cwt., owing to the small supplies coming forward and the good demand for the same from the packers, consequently the trade was active with sales of selected lots at $9.40 to $9.50 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

Sheep were firm under a fair demand and sales of ewes were made at $5 to $5.25 and bucks at $4.50 to $4.75, while yearling lambs brought $7.25 to $7.50 per cwt. A few spring lambs of fairly good quality, changed hands at from $5 to $8 each. The supply of calves was large, for which the demand was active at from $1.50 to $8 each, as to size and quality.

Lady Betty Across the Water

By C. N. & A. M. WILLIAMSON

Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

If you once let yourself go like that, you can't stop. Hearing your own little chokes and gasps makes you pity yourself so much that your heart nearly breaks. I was sobbing out loud presently, which made Vivace whine, and I had almost begun to enjoy my utter forlornness and the distinction of being the most miserable person in the whole world when a distracted voice exclaimed:

"Why, Lady Betty, Lady Betty, for heaven's sake what's happened?"

I looked up, all teary and flushed, and there was Mr. Brett staring at me with horrified eyes and his face as desperate as if he had found me struck by lightning or gored by the black and white bull.

"My precious one—my darling!" he stammered.

I was so ashamed and confused that I couldn't speak, but just sat there gazing up helplessly at him, with tears running down my cheeks and my lips trembling. The most awful look came into his eyes, and he went as pale as I was red.

"My precious one—my darling!" he stammered, and, dropping down on one knee by the big log, he put his arms around me.

"Oh!" I said. And then my head was nestling down into his neck, and instead of being wretched I was perfectly happy.

"Who has dared to make you cry?" he asked, holding me close.

"You," I answered.

"I?"

"I thought you were only being kind to me because—because you're an American and it's your duty to a foreigner."

He laughed at that—an excited, happy laugh, with a queer break in it.

"I've been half out of my mind with love for you ever since the first day I saw you looking down at me in the steerage. Am I quite out of it now, or can it be true that you care for me—just a little, little bit?"

"I care for you dreadfully," said I. "Why, this isn't friendship, is it? It's being in love."

"I should think it was—with me," he said. "It's all of me—heart, soul and body—drowning in love."

"Don't drown," I whispered to him. "I can't spare you."

After that we didn't say a word, but I hadn't supposed it was possible for any human creature to feel so seraphically happy as I did. I don't know how long a time passed before we even spoke, but it seemed only a minute—a minute stolen straight out of heaven. And he was so handsome and dear that I would have kept that minute forever if I could, for it was impossible to believe that another could be so perfect.

But by and by it did merge into sister minutes just as good, and we began to talk and tell each other things.

He told me again how he'd loved me from the very first instant, and I told him that after the day on the dock, if not before, I'd never quite had him out of my thoughts for a moment.

"There has always been a sort of undertone of you," I went on, "no matter what else I was thinking of, just as, Sally says, when you are near the sea you hear it through every other sound."

He liked having me say that, and his eyes are too glorious when he likes things that I say.

"I loved you so much," he answered, "that I felt my love must have some power over your heart. It couldn't go for nothing. I knew I wasn't worthy of you, but the love was, for no man in your own world could offer you a greater one. That's my justification for asking you to put your hand in mine. But am I asking too much? Are you sure you won't regret anything you may have to give up?"

"There's nothing I wouldn't give up to be with you always," I assured him. "But I don't see that I shall have to give up much that I really care for. We shall be poor, of course, but I shan't mind that a bit with you. We can live in a sweet little cottage somewhere, can't we? Or if you have to be in a town we shall have a wee, wee flat, and it will be such fun looking after it, just like having a doll's house, only a hundred times better. I've never been rich, you know. It's always been rather a struggle, and ever so many of my dresses have been made out of mother's or Victoria's. I shall learn to cook and sew."

"If I were so poor as all that, darling, I shouldn't be asking you to marry me," said Jim. "I'm better off than you think, for, as I told you, I've been doing fairly well lately, and I guess if one of us two ever has to cook it will be I. We might have to do that sometimes, but it will only be if we're camping somewhere."

"I do hope so. It would be glorious!" I exclaimed.

"We can have the cottage or the flat all right, or maybe even both if things go on as well as they're going now," he said, "and there's nothing on God's earth I won't do to make you happy. Heavens! I should think so, after what you're doing for me—trusting me without knowing any more of me than you've seen in these few weeks"—

"I'd have trusted you to the world's end after the day you jumped overboard and saved the little boy. Besides, you were you, and I'd have trusted you just the same if you hadn't."

"Bless you, my angel. But think of the marriages you might have made."

"I couldn't have made more than one; at least I hope not," said I flippantly. "I could never have married any one but you, so I should have had to be an old maid if you hadn't asked me, and think how awful that would have been. You don't regret asking me, do you?"

"Regret? Well—it doesn't bear talking of. I suppose I ought to be able to say that I'd meant to keep my love to myself, and it only sprang out on an ungovernable impulse. But it wouldn't be true if I did. I always meant to ask you from the very first—though I had little enough hope, even up to today, that it would be anything more than friendship on your part. But, oh, how hard I did mean to try for you. My one virtue was to wait until you had seen enough of other men—men of a different sort—for you to be sure you didn't prefer one of them. And when accident had put you very near me I did manage not to lose my head and speak while you were, in a way, under my protection, for that would have been brutal. But heaven knows—and Miss Woodburn knows—that I came mighty near it once or twice. I'm thankful I didn't. Now you know the best and worse of the other sort of man and the best and worst of me. You see the kind of people whose blood runs in my veins, and still you are ready to say that my people shall be your people. I'm not afraid of anything that can happen now."

"You needn't be," I said, slipping my other hand into his, for he had one of them already. "Mother may be vexed with me for going against her wishes, but she will have to forgive me, or even if she doesn't I shall have you."

"I think she will forgive you, darling," said Jim. "I will make her forgive you."

The rest of the day was perfectly divine, and it is almost as delightful to live it over again, as I am doing now in writing the story of it, after we have said good night.

We forgot all about going back to the house until some one came out and rang the bell for tea in the field where we couldn't help hearing. Then we told the cousins our news, and they were immensely pleased. They seemed to think that Jim and I were made for each other, and Mrs. Trowbridge said she had seen that it was coming all along.

After tea we walked over to call on Sally, and she was just as glad as I thought she would be.

"You are going to marry one of the finest fellows on earth, I believe," said she, "and I congratulate you as well as him."

I do love Sally!

RHEUMATISM YIELDS TO ZAM-BUK

Read This Lady's Experience

Just at this season many people find themselves suffering from aches and pains of rheumatism, sciatica, etc. For these, Zam-Buk is a sure cure.

Mrs. Mary Harman, Wheatley, Ont., writes: "I had rheumatism very badly. It affected my right arm and leg, and was so bad that I could not put my hand to my head or behind me. I was quite helpless, could not do my work, and could not even dress myself, but had to be attended to like a child. The rheumatism in my leg was so bad that at times I could hardly walk.

"Naturally I tried various remedies, but they seemed to do me no good. A friend advised me to try Zam-Buk. I obtained some, and had it rubbed thoroughly into the affected muscles. Before the first box was used I was very much better. I could move around the house with ease, and dress myself, and needed very little personal attention. I continued with the treatment, rubbing Zam-Buk in thoroughly every day, and in a few weeks' time the rheumatism was driven completely out of my system. The cure was permanent too, and since that time I have never been troubled with rheumatism."

It is just as good for skin injuries and diseases, eczema, scalp sores, eruptions, piles, cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, etc. All druggists and stores, 50c. box, or by mail from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

KEEP OUT!

"KEEP OUT!" used to hang as a sign on every factory door. The old idea of secrecy in business made it seem a crime to show outsiders processes, materials, and methods of manufacture.

Now the white light of publicity is being let in by those who depend on public favor for business profits and business growth. The "keep out" sign is disappearing from factory doors and the "welcome" sign is taking its place.

Candor and honesty form the backbone of modern Advertising. Men tell the truth, and it pays. Modern selling relies more and more on the confidence and good will of the buyer.

To-day, eyes are too sharp and intelligences too keen to make deceit possible. Absolute frankness in Advertising is the straight road to confidence. The public demands the light; it abominates and fears darkness.

To-day, many canning factories, packing houses, bakeshops, and public kitchens welcome visitors, concealing nothing.

To-day, many public service companies use the newspapers to tell the truth about themselves.

To-day, many big industrial enterprises are open without hindrance to the inspection of an interested public.

To-morrow, many more companies, depending for their success and prosperity on public confidence, will lift the curtains that veil their board and workrooms—they, too, will come to printing candid advertisements in the newspapers.

The public may overlook, but does not forgive, a lie or an abuse of its confidence. The public regards with suspicion those who attempt to serve it in secrecy and silence. The public is repelled by juggled facts or befogging words. The public rewards with its favor and money those who tell it the truth. It walks and shops where the light shines and where the paths are straight.

Throw on the light!

Advice regarding your advertising problems is available through any recognized Canadian advertising agency, or the Secretary of the Canadian Press Association, Room 503 Lumsden Bldg., Toronto. Enquiry involves no obligation on your part—so write, if interested.

Important Advice To SPECTACLE WEARERS

Three Plain Facts

1 That more eyes are injured by the injurious use of Glasses than by any other known cause.

2 That a great number of people are wearing spectacles unsuitable for them, and for which their eyes have not been tested.

3 That the old fashioned and unscientific method of testing the eyes by trying on various spectacles of different strengths until the sight is apparently suited, is to say the least of it, dangerous.

It cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of those who suffer from defective eye-sight that proper lenses and correctly fitting frames are absolutely essential for comfortable spectacle wearing. We grind our own lenses.

GREED OF THE COMPANIES

Responsible for Loss of Life Says Admiral Dewey

CONGRESS TAKES ACTION

Marine and Life Insurance Companies Are Heavy Losers.

Washington, April 18.—Congress acted swiftly yesterday on the Titanic catastrophe.

Bills and resolutions designed to prevent repetition of the awful disaster off the Newfoundland Banks poured into both Houses.

The Senate agreed to a resolution directing a thorough investigation by the Commerce Commission into the causes leading to the wreck, with particular reference into the adequacy of lifeboats. The resolution, the first introduced in the Senate, presented by Senator Smith of Michigan, who ranks next to the chairman of the commerce committee, was passed unanimously. The resolution follows:

"Resolved, that the committee on commerce, or a sub-committee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the causes leading to the wreck of the White Star Line Titanic, with its attendant loss of life, so shocking to the civilized world."

Should Refer to Hague.

New York, April 18.—In a statement issued yesterday, Charles Von Helmuth, general manager for Oelrichs & Co., the general agents of the North German Lloyd Steamship Co., expressed the belief that the laws of nations concerning the safety of passengers on the steamships, which now are at variance, should be referred to The Hague tribunal, which might adopt such regulations as would insure as near absolute safety as possible and under which all steamship companies would be compelled to operate.

Mr. Von Helmuth says that his company's ships on a trip from Germany to New York, must conform to the maritime regulations of four different countries—Germany, Great Britain, France and the United States—all of which are at variance.

While declaring that all steamship companies obey to the letter all the legal requirements, and in most cases have exceeded them, Mr. Von Helmuth declared that nevertheless the situation requires an international agreement.

Companies Too Greedy.

Washington, D.C., April 18.—In a statement about the Titanic and general danger in ocean voyages, Admiral Dewey said yesterday: "I think that every passenger who [illegible]ses the North Atlantic takes his [illegible]e in his hands every time. For myself, I would rather go around the world in a well-equipped man-of-war, than make a trip across the North Atlantic in a transatlantic vessel. The greed for money-making is so great that it is with the sincerest regret that I observe that human lives are never taken into consideration.

"Let everybody exert every energy to have the present laws amended as regard life-saving appliances on every passenger-carrying vessel. I do not believe that a passenger vessel should be cleared unless she has boats sufficient to float the great majority of its precious cargo in the event of an accident.

"It is appalling."

Fifty Millions Life Insurance.

New York, April 18.—While the marine insurance companies have suffered a heavy loss by the sinking of the Titanic, authorities in this city say there is still a more considerable loss that has not yet been taken into account, and which will undoubtedly exceed that of the marine companies. This is in life insurance. It is practically impossible to hazard a guess as to the amount involved, but the death of so many men, high in the financial world, will affect the life insurance companies to a greater extent than any disaster that has happened in years. One man, prominent in the life insurance world, says he will be surprised if the life insurance companies are not called upon to assume the payment at once of policies aggregating at least $50,000,000.

Opening Fund.

New York, April 18.—Mayor Gaynor yesterday received a London cablegram, saying: "Opening fund relief sufferers Titanic disaster. Will warmly welcome your sympathy."

Mayor Gaynor at once stated that funds for the relief of sufferers would be received at the mayor's offices, and cabled the Lord Mayor o' London as follows: "Relief fund Titanic sufferers has our hearty sympathy. Will open one here."

Flags on the city hall and other municipal buildings have been half-masted.

"All Well," on Carpathia.

New York, April 18.—The White Star Line made public yesterday the following unsigned message from the steamship Carpathia, probably relayed to New York:

"Carpathia east of Ambrose, 596 miles, 11 p.m. Tuesday. All well."

The Ambrose referred to is Ambrose Channel at the entrance of New York harbor. The line's officials think the Carpathia will arrive here about nine o'clock to-night.

Carried Heavy Canadian Mail.

London, April 18.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Titanic carried 176 sacks of Canadian mails from London alone. No compensation is payable.

A large number of C.P.R. dividend checks, payable in Canada, were also aboard.

Toronto Man Unionist Candidate.

London, April 18.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Harry Symons, K.C., of Toronto, has been adopted as the prospective Unionist candidate for Wathamstow division, in opposition to Sir G. Simon, who is Solicitor-General.

Mr. Symons is president of the National Agency Co., and lives at 98 Madison avenue.

The police have been instructed to see that the provisions of the by-law are strictly enforced.

So far only six tags have been sold. The number of tags issued last year was six hundred and thirty which was the lowest for some years.

Referendum Possible.

Toronto, April 18.—That the Provincial Government may submit its proposal to abolish the treating system and the Oppositions proposal to abolish the bar to a referendum is declared to be a possibility. To handle temperance questions on their merits is the desire of the Government as frequently announced by Sir James Whitney. With its legislative and administrative record on temperance many Conservatives feel that their party has gone as far as the general public will support it. Hon. W. J. Hanna's enforcement of the liquor license law is held to be responsible for the disappearance of the temperance agitation that once convulsed the province. To test the opinion of the electorate as a whole by a referendum is declared to be not impracticable, in view of the notable precedent set by Sir George Ross.

The Opinion of Le Temps.

Ottawa, April 18.—Le Temps, the French-Canadian organ here, commenting on the new policy regarding the use of French in Ontario public schools, says:

"After the fanatical utterances of Sir James Whitney's colleagues, after the Premier's own statements before the last elections, nothing else could be expected than such measures as this, inspired by that Orange fanaticism which appears to have such a strong grip on the Ontario Government."

Samuel Joseph, 420 Queen street, Toronto while going by a new building on Bolton avenue, fell over a keg of nails and broke his right leg.

About 40 architects will compete in the architectural competition for the new Technical High School, at Toronto, which closes on June 15.

SEVEN YEARS OF MISERY

How Mrs. Bethune was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Sikeston, Mo. — "For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I had cramps, backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband's told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do all my own housework, work in the garden and entertain company and enjoy them, and can walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the week. I wish I could talk to every suffering woman and girl, and tell them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

Two persons were killed and more than a score of persons injured, several seriously, when the collapse of the floor of the Church of Our Lady of Victory precipitated nearly 300 persons in the basement of Harrington Park, N.J.

VALUABLE PRIZES WILL BE OFFERED FOR C.W.A. EVENTS

A number of local motor cyclists are becoming interested in the C.W.A. meet that will be held here this summer, and some have expressed their intention to enter in the races. Some very valuable prizes are being offered for events for Peterborough men only, and for this reason there will likely be a goodly number of entries, and a real contest in the motor cycle events.

It is the intention of Mr. McPherson, who is in charge of all arrangements for the meet in August, to have a number of lady motor cyclists compete, and their race will not be the least interesting of the events of that day.

It is further anticipated that if the track can be put in condition automobile races will feature in the meet. As there has never been an event of this kind in the city before, and as few residents of Peterborough have ever had a chance to witness auto races, these events, if they materialize, will prove to be a very fine drawing card.

As in all sporting events that are pulled off here, there will likely be a large number of motor cycles in the city, and many automobiles and bicycles, so there is no reason to expect that the large number of outsiders who will most likely take part in the meet, will run away with the largest share of the glory or prizes.

FINAL SPEECHES IN THE SENIOR ORATORICAL CONTEST AT P. C. I.

A splendid concert is promised for to-morrow night in the Collegiate Assembly Hall by the students of the P.C.I. A glance at the appended program will show that the numbers are all excellent and that the pupils can give a number of varied selections that will be most interesting to hear.

A feature of the concert will be the final speeches in the Senior Oratorical contest, and the announcement of the winner of the Junior contest, which is already decided. The prizes for the competitions will be presented to-morrow night.

There will be no charge for admission. The program is—

Opening Selection—Glee Club.
Vocal Solo—Miss K. Moore.
Violin Solo—Mr. W. Wilson.

LOCAL JEWS ARRANGING FOR THE ERECTION OF A SYNAGOGUE

Already there are in the city fourteen families of Jews who have settled down and in different lines of business are active.

The problem now confronts them of a place to worship together. In the past the Jewish families have been using the Knights of Pythias Hall as a place of worship, but these quarters provide neither the sacredness or the convenience that a Jewish synagogue would possess and some of the members of the race of Israel are talking of erecting such a building. The movement, though, is not organized as yet, but the local Jews forsee that such a course will be necessitated soon and are quietly making preparations, so a Review representative was given to understand while in conversation with one of the Jewish business men to-day.

BICYCLES ARE IN DEMAND

The bicycle dealers of this city report that there is at present a very perceptible boom in the bicycle business. Several years ago the two-wheeled machine was in far more general use than it has been in the past few years, but the bicycle seems to be coming back into its own again and this season has been the busiest ever experienced by some of the local dealers.

The Canada Cycle Motor Company of Toronto has already sold machines and equipment to the amount of $100,000 over last year, and other companies are experiencing demands that exceed their output.

LABORERS IN FAVOR OF AN ORGANIZATION

WIFE'S AIM FATAL.

Woman Exonerated of Blame For Husband's Death.

Kingston, April 18.—A jury empanelled by Coroner Mandell, found that George F. Berryman, Cushindall, came to his death as a result of blood-poisoning, arising from a slight wound on the forehead, which may have resulted from a scuffle, but that no one was to blame but himself.

Mrs. Berryman, his wife, told a shocking story about her husband's ill-temper toward herself and children. She had been compelled to stay out in the bush near her home, as he threatened to kill her.

Mrs. Berryman told of a row she had with her husband a week ago, when he was injured. He was drunk and had been drunk for many days. While at table, he picked up a butcher knife and made after her, saying: "I'll cut your heart out and trample upon you," and made a rush at her.

Mrs. Berryman had a small tea-steeper in her hand at the time and she threw it at him and ran out of the house and sought shelter in a barn. He was found on the floor by one of the neighbors with blood flowing from a wound in the forehead. Many witnesses told of his acting like a manaic when drinking. When sober he caused no trouble. Mrs. Berryman said for many years her life had been in danger.

Gamey Not Going.

Toronto, April 18.—Stress of business and the length of time that such an important exploration would necessitate, have caused R. R. Gamey, M.P.P. for Manitoulin, to abandon his proposed trip as head of the party that is to investigate the newly-annexed portions of the province and the route of the T. & N. O. Railway over the five-mile strip through Manitoba to Hudson Bay.

Sir James Whitney stated yesterday that the Government would have liked Mr. Gamey to lead the party, but he had found it unable to do so. The Prime Minister denied the truth of certain published statements that Mr. Gamey would not go north on account of differences between the Government and himself with regard to remuneration.

"The exploration party will be gone for probably five months," said Sir James, "and Mr. Gamey finds it impossible to remain away from his business for that length of time. The statement that he is not going because of differences between the Government and himself is absolutely untrue. The question of his remuneration never has been discussed by any member of the Government and himself and has not even been considered."

J. W. Tyrell, the eminent mining engineer, has been unofficially mentioned as a likely man for the position.

Little Girl Burned.

Toronto, April 18.—Nine-year-old Myrtle Winkworth was so badly burned about the body while playing around a bonfire in front of her mother's home near Windermere avenue, Monday afternoon, that she died at four o'clock yesterday afternoon. The little girl was the daughter of Mrs. Eva Winkworth, who is a widow with a large family.

The bonfire was almost out, when a spark set fire to the child's print dress. Myrtle's mother and older sisters were away at the time and could not be called. The girl's playmates were panic-stricken, and could think of no means to save their companion. A neighbor, Mrs. Coe, although an invalid, hurried from a nearby house and wrapped the child in an overcoat.

Dr. J. A. Whillans, of Park road, Swansea was hurriedly called and dressed the wounds, but assistance had come too late. The shock had been too severe, and the child, who bore up bravely though suffering terrible agony, died in great pain twenty-four hours later.

May Ride on Molasses Roads.

Washington, D.C., April 18.—The people of the United States may be riding over roads of molasses in the near future. The bureau of good roads is making experiments near here with a cheap grade of molasses, mixed with lime water as a dust-laying cover for roads. Logan W. Page, director of the bureau, said that in the beet sugar country the cheap "black strap" molasses now destroyed as of no value, might be used in this road work.

End of Family Quarrel.

Philadelphia, April 18.—Meyer Blank, 29 years old, shot and killed his mother-in-law, Mrs. Esther Wasserman, seriously injured his wife and then ended his own life at the home of his wife's parents in this city.

Mrs. Blank was holding a five-weeks old infant when she was shot. The young couple had been separated for some time.

Little Boy Identified.

Toronto, April 18.—The little 2 1-2-year-old boy, who was found lying in the road at Dovercourt and Queen streets this morning, has been identified.

His name is Roy Brittle, of 1 Lisgar place. It is not yet known at the Hospital for Sick Children how he met with his accident, and he was taken home yesterday.

Versailles, France, April 18—Friends of Verrept, the Belgian aviator, now express the opinion that he committed suicide. He had, Tuesday, they say, had a dispute with his fiance, to whom he swore that he would kill himself.

Observers of his flight say they saw Verrept throw his arms up and the aeroplane, then left to itself, crashed 600 feet to the ground. The machine was found in perfect working order. He was 23 years of age.

Caught In Machine Belt.

Brockville, April 18.—While operating a sawing machine at Avondale Farm, N. N. Jarvis, aged 18, got his right arm caught in the belt running from the engine. He was whirled around the wheel and when picked up, was unconscious. One arm was broken in four places.

"PLAY BALL" IS SOUNDED IN INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

With the prospects for good weather not of the brightest, the eight teams of the International League are billed to open the 1912 season today. Toronto opens at Jersey City and Joe Kelly is pulling for a successful getaway in the shape of a healthy win in the stronghold of the Skeeters. The games and umpires are:

Toronto at Jersey City, umpires Guthrie and Doyle.

Buffalo at Newark, umpires Kelly and Howell.

Rochester at Providence, umpires Murray and Matthews.

Montreal at Baltimore, umpires Byron and Mullen.

TORONTO AND JERSEY CITY.

The batting order for to-day is as follows:

Toronto—McConnell 2b, Shaw cf, Dalton rf, Jordan 1b, Bradley 3b, Meyer lf, Holly ss, Fischer c, Rudolph p.

Jersey City—Breen 2b, Agler 1b, Callahan cf, Deininger lf, Wheeler rf, Roach ss, Jauvin 3b, Bernis c, Doescher p.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

Nothing doing in the line of baseball, as the schedule has not arrived in Peterborough yet, and Riverside Park still resembles a miniature lake, although if the weather man will favor us with a few warm days, the park will be in good shape, as it is a sawdust bottom and absorbs the water quickly. If Riverside is not in shape for ball when the players arrive they will likely work out at the Exhibition grounds or Oval.

If, as some of the aldermen think the newly appointed Sanitary Inspector should wear an official piece of head-wear what will the ball club directors decided on as a distinguishing mark for manager Templin.

It of course won't be proper for the local fans to look interested, and rubber when the members of the Big Show hit the park. Each one must look wise, and during a possible exchange of the glad hand—or a request for a loan,—talk baseball as she is talked across the line.

Knotty Lee, it is said will refuse to go to London, because he has Corns. Help! Help!

The Ottawas will have plenty of room for any swat fest they may start this season. From the home place to centre field, it will be just 400 feet, while there will be an additional 50 feet added to this in the right and left fields, long enough for any Hans Wagner that the Canadian League may develop.

The St. Thomas Club are after Eddie Siever, the former Detroit pitcher, to manage their team. With Bowerman at London and Siever at St. Thomas, the Canadian League is beginning to show class. Wonder if all this would have happened had Peterboro and Ottawa stayed out?—Ottawa Citizen.

About two hundred players will try out for positions on the various clubs in the Canadian League. Over thirty will fight it out with the Berlin champions at Windsor, while as many will be found working under Knotty Lee and Amby Kane at Hamilton and Brantford, respectively.

The most costly tomb in existence is that which was erected to the memory of Mohammed. The diamonds and rubies used in the decorations are worth £2,000,000.

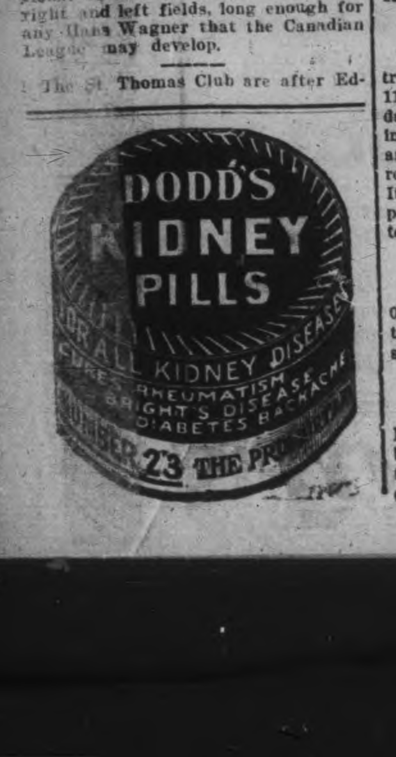
Belgium is one of the smallest countries in regard to area, containing only 11,373 square miles, but it stands today the fifth of all nations of the world in regard to commerce and industries and is the most densely settled in Europe, containing 7,817,561 inhabitants. It is is also one of the richest countries per capita and second to none in enterprise.

Crowded India.

The population of India is 315,000,000, though its area is not greater than that of nine or ten of our western states.

Guncotton.

A row of guncotton reaching from Edinburgh to London, it is said, could be fired in two minutes, so rapid is the transmission of detonation from one part to another.



THE CLOSED GENTIAN

A Flower That Played a Part In a Love Episode.

By VIRGINIA LEILA WENTZ.

The serious business of settling up her brother's estate was about finished. Miss Morton leaned wearily back in her invalid's chair and sighed. After all, she was sorry. Doubtless it would mean a cessation of her lawyer's frequent and periodic visits, and—well, he had been something new under her sun.

"I leave for Bar Harbor tomorrow, to be gone a week. On my return I'll send you a telegram and arrange for our final interview." Howell Orchard's crisp, staccato sentences punctured her reverie. He was picking up his gloves. A high cart had just driven under the porte cochere, and Miss Morton's liveried groom was busy quieting the antics of a pair of brown cobs.

Miss Morton groped for a pretext to spin out the call of her lawyer, if only for five minutes. It was stupid of Peter to have driven up so early, and so bourgeois! Her eye fell on the nearest object, a bowl of orchids.

"Exquisite, are they not?" she said, with a slight indicating motion of her patrician, blue veined hand. Orchard's keen glance noted them, at the same time ranging the extravagant refinement of the room.

"In keeping with their surroundings, Miss Morton," he rejoined, pulling on his left hand glove; "artistically correct."

She made no further pretext. It was fatuous, but it answered her purpose. "What is your favorite flower?" she asked.

It was an inane question, and she bit her lip; but, to her relieved surprise, Orchard gave her inquiry his consideration.

"The closed gentian," he said after a slight pause.

* * * * * * *

Wynchell, Miss Morton's country home, with its ancestral acres, was about far enough from Jersey City to leave time on the suburban train for a comfortable perusal of the paper and a yawn or two besides. Orchard spread out his sheet mech[illegible] But even the [illegible] seem [illegible] interest him, and he looked far beyond his paper. That was only natural. He was looking back through several seasons of blossoms and snow, this man, who, young as he was, had already begun to be called a woman hater. The whizzing telegraph wires and poles passed unseen. The noise of the engine, the rumble of the wheels, dwindled into silence. In their stead came the low, exquisite voice of a girl:

"It's such a beautiful little flower inside, Howell"—

The day had been full of late September elixir, then as now. The tread of loveliness had been on the fields of grass and fodder ripened by August suns and tanned by early frosts to an autumnal bronze. Somewhere from among the hedges of sumac had come the call of a quail. Then presently the girl had stopped near a silvery stream and plucked a plain enough looking dark blue flower and pinned it on his coat.

"It's a closed gentian, you know, dear," she had explained, while the soft tendrils of her hair had unconsciously brushed his strong chin. "You see," she went on, stooping to pluck another, "they're not so very handsome outside, but inside—look!" Delicately as a spring zephyr she had pricked the portals open. "It puts the flaming goldenrod and all the staring purple daisies here to shame, doesn't it?" She lifted her face to him—the face of a girl not particularly beautiful, but glorified by a dazzling smile.

He had left her at the gate of her little western home and, leaning over the rustic fence in the privacy of the broad oak, had bid her goodby, for he was going to the big eastern metropolis for a year or two to win fame and fortune for them both. He went away with the sweetness of her kiss upon his lips, her tear upon his cheek, her flower in his coat.

Later there had come a misunderstanding, of the slight, insignificant sort that most young lovers have; but, alas, in this case before the gentle, healing wind of the real truth had blown tragedy had visited the girl's home, and when the man sought her she was not to be found. Out in her little western village people told a tale of her father's long illness and death—how she had nursed him night and day with untiring tenderness; how, their slight income being exhausted, she had taken up water color work and filled orders for dinner cards and little pictures; how finally, upon his death, she had gone to New York city to earn her living in such fashion as she could.

That was all Orchard had been able to learn, and that had been two years ago. To find a girl who does water color work or dinner cards in New York city is not an easy matter. By the time his train had reached the smoke of the tunnel the man with the unread paper was thoroughly out of conceit with Emily; by the time the ferryboat had bumped into the slip on the New York side he was thoroughly out of conceit with himself.

* * * * * * *

Miss Morton brought her lorgnon to bear upon the flowers Miss Gray had just brought in.

"So they are what you call closed gentians?" questioned she half incredulously. "Are you sure?"

"I—I'm very sure, Miss Morton." The girl's voice was exquisitely low and musical.

"But they're so homely, so unfinished looking, and I thought—well, never mind. Arrange them there in that vase, if you will. My lawyer, a young fellow in whom I've taken a great interest, is co[illegible] d[illegible] [illegible] here today, and they are his favorite flower."

Miss Gray lost the last of the sentence. From the silver faucet in Miss Morton's marble bathtub she was drawing water for the cut glass she held. Besides, Miss Morton had spoken more than half to herself.

It had been only three days now that Miss Gray had been with her in the capacity of companion, and already Miss Morton found herself exchanging that young person's status from companion to confidante. She had always had a liking for her, this girl with the tired, pale face and the sweet, sudden smile, ever since the day when she had come personally to explain that there had been some little mistake in the ordered dinner cards and to make her apologies. It appears she had given the dinner ladies powdered silver hair instead of dazzling gold. That had been at the beginning of last season. During the present summer the little sketches that she had been able to sell hadn't proved sufficient for her to eke out even a modest existence with. Miss Morton was looking for a companion, and she had offered her services. That is the way it had all come about.

There was the rhythmic thud, thud, of horses' hoofs on macadam, and Miss Morton's brown cobs whirled through an iron gate into a modest drive and came to an abrupt halt under her porte cochere. A gray drizzle had set in, but what did that matter to Howard Orchard? The fine drops of rain driven against his face by the pace of the cobs had been an exhilarating delight to him, and as Miss Morton was wheeled into the library to greet him he was positively cordial.

Miss Morton had forgotten her lorgnon. Being very shortsighted, she was at a loss to know exactly where her companion had placed the gentians. And, above all things, should the sight of the flowers bring an appreciable fraction of pleasure into Orchard's immobile face she didn't want to lose the sight. She rang for a maid.

"Ask Miss Gray to fetch me my lorgnon," said she.

"So you remembered!" The exclamation came from Orchard, and Miss Morton lost the sight she had wished for, after all. He had crossed to an ebony cabinet on top of which stood the cut glass vase. "Awkward things to arrange in vases, though," he commented laconically, as if regretting his burst of emotion.

"Yes, that's what my companion said. She went out willingly enough in all this drizzle to pluck them, but she shied at arranging them in a vase. She assures me they belong to the fields, and"—

But Orchard veered quickly around. In the mirror back of the ebony cabinet he'd caught the reflection of a girl's face. Before he had seen her face, though, he had recognized her. There was no other woman he knew who held her head so proudly and at the same time had that wavering little walk so at variance with the queenly carriage of her head.

"Emily!" he cried. "You!"

The girl's hand which held the lorgnon clutched it tightly and went up to her breast. The other half groped toward him, as with a little incredulous cry she repeated the one word, "You!"

* * * * * * *

"Too bad, too bad," murmured kind hearted Miss Morton indulgently to herself that evening, laying down her Goethe unread. The day had cleared beautifully. The last scrap of estate settling business had been attended to, and now her lawyer and her companion were enjoying a bit of the mellow harvest moon out on the back veranda. "Too bad! I was just beginning to congratulate myself on what a treasure Miss Gray would be in my declining years, and now—the end of the beginning or the beginning of the end. Marie," she said, turning to the maid, "take those homely blue flowers away. Take them up to Miss Gray's room."

Marquis Komura's House.

The late Marquis Komura was famous for his bohemian habits. He had little thought for his personal comfort. Not till the conclusion of the Anglo-Japanese alliance did he possess a residence of his own. But when he was given a large sum of money by the emperor after the consummation of the alliance he had a new residence built at Haramachi. Never once during the building of the house nor for a long time after it was built did he visit his new property. He lived exclusively in the official residence, going to the imperial hotel for his meals. One evening, however, he took a long walk, in the course of which he fancied he would make a visit to his new residence. He walked about Haramachi in quest of his new house, but could not find it until he inquired at a police box.—Yokohama Herald.

Siam's Plowing Festival.

The plowing ceremony of Siam is a very imposing public function. The king of Siam is represented by the minister of agriculture, who, escorted with native music and much beating of drums, proceeds to the plowing field, where sacred scriptures are chanted and mystic rites are performed. The oxen, decorated with garlands, are yoked to the plow, the first furrow is opened, and rice is sown. Modern plows are just being introduced.

YOU CAN BE ABSOLUTELY SURE OF VALUES

If you carefully read the store advertisements and follow them in your buying.

Merchants advertise certain lines because they know these lines will advertise their stores. Because there is something about certain goods, they are put in conspicuous places and the people are told about them. It may be the exclusiveness or newness of design, it may be an unusual quality, it may be an attractive price.

But there is at least one definite, sure reason why a merchant advertises an article and is willing to stake the reputation of his store upon it.

Therefore, when you see an article advertised in THE REVIEW, depend upon it, that article is good value, as good value as can be obtained in that particular store.

WHY A WATCH WEARS OUT

Neglect is responsible for most Watches going wrong. A Watch should be thoroughly overhauled, at least once a year. Dust collecting in a Watch causes it to run dry, the grit will then wear away the delicate bearings. If you own a good watch, better be on the safe side — Bring it to our Repair Department where it will receive Skilled Attention.

FIRE CHIEF AND ALDERMAN IN LIVELY ROW

Windsor, April 17.—Chief Murray of the Windsor fire department has been suspended from duty for alleged violent and abusive language towards Ald. Hamilton Trumble, Chairman of the Fire Committee, and as a result, the differences in the department, which are of long standing may be aired in the Council meeting. Trumble and Chief Murray have been at odds for some time and when they came together at the Central Fire Hall yesterday there was a war of words, which culminated, it is alleged, in Murray threatening Ald. Trumble with violence. Soon after Ald. Trumble left the hall the order suspending Chief Murray was issued over Trumble's signature, and Assistant Chief Defields was placed in charge. Murray declares Ald. Trumble has no authority to suspend him and says he is still on the pay roll, while the Alderman is equally positive that the reverse is the case.

CAN YOU SWIM? IF NOT, LEARN

Y.M.C.A. Gives an Invitation to Every Man and Boy in the City to Learn the Art at the Y.M.C.A.---Lessons Will Start April 22nd.

There are many people in the city of Peterborough who in their early days failed to acquire the useful, as well as beneficial, art of swimming, and have longed for an opportunity to again present itself.

If this be true, it would be well for such persons to make use of the opportunity that will be presented during the next two weeks commencing April 22nd.

The local Young Men's Christian Association will conduct a swimming campaign, and have placed their large plunge bath, as well as competent instruction, at the disposal of every man and boy in Peterborough who is desirious of acquiring this knowledge.

Tickets have been distributed throughout the schools, and the boys will be handled in groups each afternoon, after school hours. A bronze button will be given to every boy who is able to swim 50 feet at the close of the campaign.

The men will be looked after in the evenings from 8.00 to 9.30, and every man in Peterborough who cannot now swim, will be made welcome. The only conditions are that each must present himself at the Association office and ask for a swimmer's ticket which will admit him to the bath room.

Last year 95 boys presented themselves for instruction and 47 were taught to swim, and it has been thought wise to include the men of the city in this year's campaign.

The Review has been informed that the campaign is being conducted by the Physical Department of the Association, and will be under the personal direction of the Physical Director and an able and competent corps of assistants.

This certainly is a generous offer on the part of the local institution and is worthy of the approval of every citizen.

NEW GENERAL SECRETARY IS SECURED FOR LOCAL Y.M.C.A.

A successor to H. M. Gilchrist as General Secretary of the local Y. M. C. A., has been secured by the directors in the person of Mr. Alonzo A. Hainsworth, who has sent in his resignation as general secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Batavia, N.Y., where he has been most successful since taking up the position on September 1, 1910.

Mr. Hainsworth is thirty-three years of age and is married.

That he is energetic and capable is evidenced in the fact that since his connection with the Batavia Y.M.C.A. a building fund of $50,000 was raised and building operations are about to be commenced.

Previous to taking the position which he now holds, Mr. Hainsworth was at Akron, Ohio. His resignation takes effect on May 15th, and he will then come to Peterborough.

Since the departure of Mr. Gilchrist, much extra work has fallen on the physical director, Mr. Thompson, and the boy's secretary, Mr. Hall, but the general work at the Association has proceeded along the regular groove, owing to their efforts. Mr. Thompson, the Review understands, has received several enticing offers from Ontario and the West, but is undecided.

MARLBOROUGH CLUB DANCE

The Marlborough Club gave another popular and successful informal "At Home" last evening, this being the first held since the Club decided to alter the club name of West End Athletic Club, to the more distinguished name of Marlborough.

The program of the evening was varied most pleasingly by the first portion from nine to eleven, being devoted to euchre. Dancing then commenced, continuing to about two fifteen. This innovation proved very acceptable and will probably be the order of future functions given by the club.

In the progressive euchre contest, the first prize fell to Miss Margaret Sherlin, and Mr. Will Thornton, and the lowest honor were annexed by Miss Dolly Evans and Mr. Will Pratt. The prizes in each case were gold pins engraved with the new club insigna and date.

The music was [illegible] supplied by Miss Gladman, who [illegible] a great favorite with all, by her liberality in responding to encores.

Supper was served early in the dance program.

The invitation list for the affair was very extended, it being estimated that nearly one hundred and twenty in all were present.

Quite a number of the members of the Belmost Club were noticed in attendance.

Among those present was Captain Fee, of the 45th Regiment, Lindsay, the guest of some of the club members, who constitute part of his command.

The dance was in every sense successful, and highly enjoyed.

The committee in charge were Messrs. W. Pratt, R. Langford, W. Thornton, R. Wotten, N. Laing and R. H. Hegan.

MRS. ASTOR A TITANIC PASSENGER.

MRS JOHN JACOB ASTOR

Mrs. John Jacob Astor was one of the prominent passengers on board the steamship Titanic when the latter collided with the iceberg off Cape Race.

Col. Astor's young bride, who is amongst the saved, was Miss Madeline Talmage Force, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Force, of Philadelphia. Col. Astor and Miss Force were married September 10th, 1911, in the white and gold parlor of the millionaire's Beechwood estate, Newport, R.I. This was his second marriage. In 1891 he wedded Miss Alva Lowle Willing, of Philadelphia, and was divorced from her in November, 1909. They had one son, Vincent Astor, who is a student at Harvard University, from which the father graduated in 1888. The divorce proceedings caused a profound sensation at the time. All the papers were sealed and have not yet been made public. The widow of the late millionaire is just a bud of a woman being only in the 22nd year of her age; the colonel had he been saved, would have been 49 years old on July 13th next. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Astor, of New York.

The enormous Astor wealth came mostly from New York City real estate, the value of which has been variously estimated, the lowest estimate being $150,000,000; while the total Astor wealth was estimated at $450,000,000. Besides his Newport residence and properties, Col. Astor maintained a magnificent town house at Fifth avenue, New York, and a country home, Ferncliff, at Rhinebeck, N.Y.

OFFICERS OF ST. JAMES' CHURCH EPWORTH LEAGUE

The Epworth League of St. James' Methodist Church at the annual business meeting held last Monday night, with the president, Mr. J. J. Goodwin in the chair, listened to excellent reports read by several vice-presidents and it was shown that the past year had been one of marked activity in every department.

[illegible] J. G. Brown, in the chair the election of officers took place as follows:

President—Mr. J. J. Goodwin, re-elected.
Vice-Pres. of Christian Endeavor Department—Mr. M. Bacon, re-elected.
Vice-Pres. of Missionary Department—Miss M. Kidd.
Vice-Pres. of Literary Department—Mr. Wm. McLaren.

ASTRONOMY

At the meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society, in the Collegiate next Monday they will try to deduce from known facts whether or not Mars is inhabited.

And if Mars is not inhabited there will certainly come a time when the earth will swing around on its lonely way an empty deserted globe, for the earth is surely following in the footsteps of Mars.

This meeting is not for the society only. The general public is most cordially invited. Come along and bring all your friends. Admission free. No collection.

GRAYSTOCK

Special Correspondence.

Graystock, April 16.—Rev. F. J. Sawers expects to hold service at three o'clock at St. Mark's church next Sunday afternoon, April 21st.

Why He Asked.

They were on their wedding tour and imagined that every civility given them related to their new condition of servitude.

Having stopped off at a way station, the bridegroom was approached by the station agent, who asked:

"Are you going to take the next train?"

"It's none of your business," retorted the bridegroom indignantly as he guided the bride up the platform, where they condoled with each other over the impertinence of some of the natives.

Onward came the train, its vapor curling from afar. It was the last to their destination that day—an express. Nearer and nearer it came at full speed; then in a moment it whizzed past and was gone.

"Why in thunder didn't that train stop?" yelled the bridegroom.

"'Cos you said 'twar'n none of my bizness. I has to signal if that train's to stop."

RUG SUPERSTITIONS.

Many Oriental Weavers In Constant Dread of the "Evil Eye."

The little cottage oriental rugs often made by girls who are shortly to be married in Turkey, Persia, on the Armenian plateau and in Afghanistan carry with them all the poetry and mysticism of the oriental girl's mind as she is just budding into womanhood.

She weaves into the rugs almost her very thoughts—so much is rug weaving a part of the oriental life and so little is it a purely commercial pursuit. Time is not counted of value in the east when rugs are made. Consequently Anglo-Saxons have found it impossible to compete with the orientals in the manufacture of these practically everlasting products.

In some parts of the oriental rug countries it is considered wrong to have the rugs seen in the making by Christians. If such an accident occurs and one from the western world views one of the rugs the workman offsets the suspected injury by weaving a small white spot in the rug, to keep away the "evil eye."

Sometimes, when the rug is not made for sale, but as the dowry of some girl at the time of her marriage, and when something inauspicious has happened, a little break is left in the border of the rug, by which it is hoped that the devil may escape from the household. Were the border continuous the orientals believe that the devil would run around and around the rug and never leave the house.—Suburban Life.

Quaint Clubs.

Mention of the fact that a snuff club has been started in Leeds, reminds an Answers' scribe that the list of similar extraordinary organizations is a long one.

Of course, one of the oldest purely social clubs was the Everlasting Club, limited in membership to a hundred people, who divided the day among them in such a way that some of them were always on the premises. Solely for the purpose of keeping in the fire from which members lighted their pipes, an old woman was kept, and during the fifty years of existence the club members smoked fifty tons of tobacco.

No one who had not killed an opponent in a duel was allowed to be a member of the Mankilling Club, where the conversation was confined to wounds, bullets, and slaughter. Curiously enough, most of the members were executed!

Very different in character was the Six o'Clock Club, whose members, numbering six only, met at six in the evening and separated at six in the morning.

Meeting early in the evening, and sitting smoking until midnight, the curious people forming the Hum-drum Club observed the strictest silence!

But perhaps the most curious club of all was the No-Nose Club, which was founded by an unwilling follower of the Egyptian fashion of flat faces.

White Africans.

That race in northern Africa known as the Berbers is white, and if they dressed like our own people and had the habits of Americans or Europeans they could easily pass for such. The Berbers are believed to be descendants of the white inhabitants of ancient Europe. They are Mohammedans. Blue eyes, fair hair and rosy cheeks are quite common among them, and many of the women are strikingly handsome.

Seizing the Occasion.

Dugald (in response to friendly invitation)—Weel, mon. I never touch whusky noo unless I'm at the heicht o' hilarity or the depth o' depression, but I daur say I'm at present just in the state o' mind that wal justifie a bit taste.—London Opinion.

New Year's Gifts.

The custom of making New Year's presents is derived from a remote antiquity. There was a grove in Rome dedicated to the goddess Strenia, whom the Romans regarded as the patroness of gifts, and from that grove it was customary to get fresh twigs to give as presents to friends and relatives on New Year's day. During the sway of the emperors the people made New Year's gifts to their sovereign. The custom of making New Year's gifts was continued after Europe had become Christian. For a time present making was transferred to Easter, but later on it again became associated with the first day of January.

An Inquisitive Jury.

It is told of one jury that after having been in the jury room for half an hour following the close of the trial the jury returned to the courtroom to ask the judge a question. When he announced his readiness to give the jury any needed information bearing on the case, the foreman said:

"What we want to know, your honor, is if you think that the prisoner is guilty or not guilty."

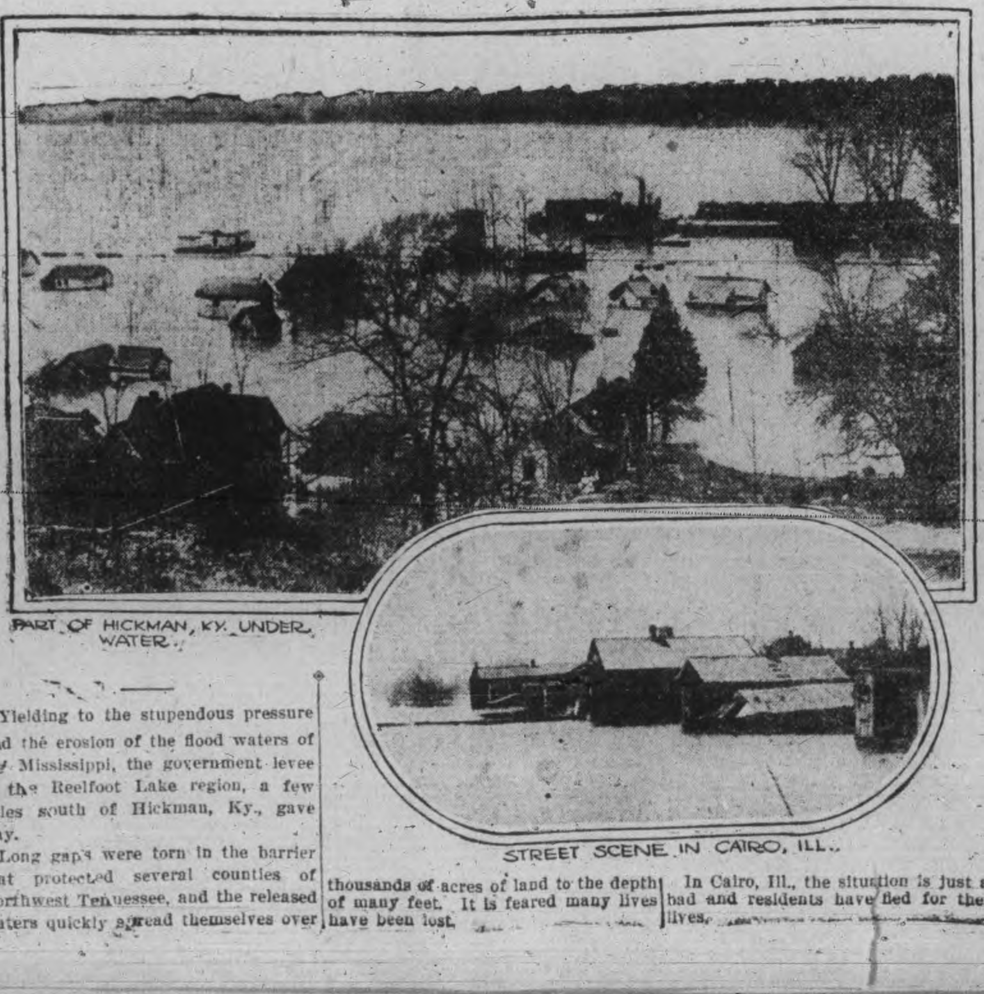
FLOOD BREAKS LEVEE AT HICKMAN, KY., AND MANY SWEPT TO DEATH



PART OF HICKMAN, KY., UNDER WATER.

STREET SCENE IN CAIRO, ILL.

Yielding to the stupendous pressure and the erosion of the flood waters of the Mississippi, the government levee in the Reelfoot Lake region, a few miles south of Hickman, Ky., gave way.

Long gaps were torn in the barrier that protected several counties of Northwest Tennessee, and the released waters quickly spread themselves over thousands of acres of land to the depth of many feet. It is feared many lives have been lost.

In Cairo, Ill., the situation is just as bad and residents have fled for their lives.

LAST AWFUL MOMENTS ON BOARD THE TITANIC AS TOLD BY SOME SURVIVORS

BAND PLAYED AS BIG LINER WENT TO HER GRAVE

Major Peuchen Makes Charge That Accident Was Due to Carelessness of the Captain and Crew---Ship Did not Have Searchlight---Speed Was Not Slackened Although Danger Was Known.

SPECIAL TO THE REVIEW.

New York, April 19.—A momento of the wreck which Major Peuchen of Toronto, cherishes most is a torn scrap of paper on which is scrawled "Major Arthur Peuchen was ordered into a life boat by me owing to the fact that I required a seaman which he proved to be, as well as a brave man. Signed, D. C. H. Lintollie, second officer Titanic." Major Peuchen charges that the accident was due to gross carelessness on the part of the captain and crew, and says a searchlight which the vessel did not possess would have revealed the presence of ice ahead. He along with Hays, Molson, and Davidson, went on deck to see the ice after the Titanic struck. The jar, he says, had been so slight that they were surprised to find people donning life belts and to see that the Titanic was listing to one side.

STEAD RETURNED TO BERTH AND DEATH

New York, April 19.—W. T. Stead, the noted English journalist, is believed to have been asleep when the Titanic sank. It is said he sauntered calmly on the deck when the vessel struck the iceberg, discussed quietly with the fellow passengers the probable size of the great mountain of ice, and expressed the opinion that "a few of the passengers are unnecessarily alarmed." He then said he would turn in and he went to his stateroom. He was never seen again.

MONTREAL LADY LOST HER HOLD

New York, April 19.—Mrs. Allison of Montreal, died a terrible death, says Major Peuchen. She was on a raft which was partially submerged by its load, but she held on to a man's leg until gradually her hold loosened and she fell back and was drowned in the merciless ocean.

MRS. FUTRELLE SAYS MEN WERE BRAVE

New York, April 19.—Mrs. Jacques Futrelle, one of those rescued from the Titanic, and whose husband was drowned, made the emphatic assertion to-day that the men who were saved, except those required to man the boats, sneaked into lifeboats. She paid a tribute to the bravery of men who lost their lives.

New York, April 19.—The Cunard liner Carpathia, a ship of gloom and succor, came into New York last night with the first news direct from the great White Star liner Titanic, which sank off the Grand Banks of Newfoundland early on Monday morning last.

The great liner went down with her band playing, taking with her to death all but 745 of her human cargo of 2,340 souls.

To this awful death list six persons were added. One died in the lifeboats which were put off from the liner's side and five subsequently succumbed on the rescue ship Carpathia. The list of prominent men missing stands as previously reported, and the total death list as brought to port last night by the Carpathia is 1601.

Survivors in the lifeboats huddled in the darkness at a safe distance from the stricken ship and saw her go down. As to the scene on board when the liner struck, accounts disagree widely. Some maintain that a comparative calm prevailed; others say that wild disorder broke out and that there was a maniacal struggle for the lifeboats. That the liner struck an iceberg as reported by wireless was confirmed by all.

Sensational rumors told by hysterical passengers who would not give their names said that Captain Smith had killed himself on the bridge; that the chief engineer had taken his life, and that three Italians were shot in the struggle for the boats. These rumors could not be confirmed in the early confusion attendant upon the landing of the survivors.

Ripped from stem to engine-room by the great mass of ice she struck amidships, the Titanic's side was laid open as if by a gigantic can-opener. She quickly listed to starboard and a shower of ice fell on to the forecastle deck. Shortly before she sank she broke in two abaft the engine-room, and as she disappeared beneath the water the expulsion of air caused two explosions, which were plainly heard by the survivors adrift. A moment more and the Titanic had gone to her doom, with the fated hundreds grouped on the afterdeck. To the survivors they were visible to the last, and their cries and moans were pitiable.

E. Z. Taylor of Philadelphia, one of the survivors, jumped into the sea just three minutes before the boat sunk. He told a graphic story as he came from the Carpathia.

"I was eating when the boat struck the iceberg," he said. "There was an awful shock, that made the boat trembled from stem to stern. I did not realize for some time what had happened. No one seemed to know the extent of the accident. We were told that an iceberg had been struck by the ship. I felt the boat rise and it seemed to me that she was riding over the ice. I ran out on deck, and then I could see ice. It was a veritable sea of ice and the boat was rocking over it. I should say that parts of the iceberg were 80 feet high, but it had been broken into sections, probably by our ship.

"I jumped into the ocean and was picked up by one of the boats. I never expected to see land again. I waited on board the boat until the lights went out. It seemed to me that the discipline on board was wonderful."

Col. Archibald Gracie, U.S.A., the last man saved, went down with the vessel, but was picked up. Col. Gracie told a remarkable story of personal hardship and denied emphatically the reports that there had been any panic on board. He praised in the highest terms the behavior of both passengers and the crew, and paid a high tribute to the heroism of the women passengers.

"Mrs. Isador Straus," he said, "went to her death because she would not desert her husband. Although he pleaded with her to take her place in the boat, she steadfastly refused, and when the ship settled at the head, the two were engulfed by the wave that swept her."

Col. Gracie told of how he was driven to the topmost deck when the ship settled, and was the sole survivor after the wave that swept her just before her final plunge had passed.

"I jumped with the wave," said he, "just as I often have jumped with the breakers at the seashore. By great good fortune I managed to grasp the brass railing on the deck above and I hung on by might and main. When the ship plunged down I was forced to let go and I was swirled around and around for what seemed to be an interminable time. Eventually I came to the surface, to find the sea a mass of tangled wreckage.

"Luckily, I was unhurt, and casting about managed to seize a wooden grating floating nearby. When I had recovered my breath I discovered a larger canvas and cork life raft, which had floated up. A man, whose name I did not learn, was struggling toward it from some wreckage to which he had clung. I cast off and helped him to get on to the raft and we then began the work of rescuing those who had jumped into the sea and were floundering in the water.

"When dawn broke there were thirty of us on the raft, standing knee deep in the icy water and afraid to move lest the creaky shaft be overturned. Several unfortunates, benumbed and half dead, besought us to save them, and one or two made an effort to reach us, but we had to warn them away. Had we made any effort to save them we all might have perished.

"The hours that elapsed before we were picked up by the Carpathia were the longest and most terrible that I ever spent. Practically without any sensation of feeling because of the icy water, we were almost dropping from fatigue. We were afraid to turn around to look to see whether we were seen by passing craft and when someone who was facing the stern passed the word that something that looked like a steamer was coming up one of the men became hysterical under the strain. The rest of us, too, were nearing the breaking point."

Col. Gracie denied with emphasis that any of the men were fired upon and declared that only once was a revolver discharged.

"This was for the purpose of intimidating some steerage passengers," he said, "who had tumbled into a boat before it was prepared for launching. This shot was fired in the air, and when the foreigners were told that the next would be directed at them they promptly returned to the deck. There was no confusion and no panic."

Contrary to the general expectation, there was no jarring impact when the vessel struck, according to the army officer. He was in his berth when the vessel smashed into the submerged portion of the berg and was aroused by the jar. He looked at his watch, he said, and found it was just midnight. The ship sank with him at 2.22 a.m., for his watch stopped at that hour.

Lawrence Beasley, an Englishman, graphically describes the sinking of the Titanic:

"And then there fell on the ear the most appalling sound that human being ever listened to—the cries of hundreds of our fellow-being struggling in the icy cold water, crying for help with a cry that we knew could not be answered. We longed to return and pick up some of those swimming, but this would have meant swamping our boat and further loss of the lives of all of us.

"We tried to sing to keep the women from hearing the cries, and rowed hard to get away from the scene of the wreck, but I think the memory of those sounds will be one of the things the rescued will find it hard to efface from memory. We are all trying hard not to think of it."

"What in your opinion was the cause of the accident?" asked a reporter of Major Puechen of Toronto, as he stepped on to the Cunard pier from the Carpathia last evening. "I say it was carelessness, gross carelessness," declared Major Peuchen with emphasis. "Why, the captain knew we were going into an ice field, and why should he remain dining in the saloon when such danger was about?"

Another story of British courage concerns Mrs. Richard Otter of Berea, whose husband was a passenger. She rushed to the home of her brother-in-law, Wm. H. Otter, in Cleveland, when she heard of the disaster, and scanned the list of survivors, but her husband's name was not there. She was near collapse until she read that men had sacrificed their lives that women and children might live.

"It is hard to lose him," said Mrs. Otter yesterday, "but it is fine to think he went as he did. I think it is right the men should stand back. It will be a wonderful thing for our son to remember that his father died a hero. My husband was an Englishman, and I should want him to meet his end bravely."

Didn't Slacken Speed.

New York, April 19.—The New York World this morning published the following exclusive account of the sinking of the Titanic, by Carlos F. Hurd, staff correspondent of The World and assistant telegraph editor of The St. Louis Post-Despatch, on board the Carpathia:

Facts which I have established by enquiries on the Carpathia as positively as they could be established, in view of the silence of the few surviving officers, are:

That the Titanic's officers knew several hours before the crash of the possible nearness of icebergs.

That the Titanic's speed, 23 knots an hour, was not slackened.

That the number of lifeboats on the Titanic was insufficient to accommodate much more than one-third of the passengers, to say nothing of the crew. Most members of the crew say there were 16 lifeboats and two collapsibles. None say there were more than 20 boats in all. The 700 who escaped filled most of the 16 lifeboats and the one collapsible got away, to the limit of their capacity.

Two Lifeboats Sank.

New York, April 19.—"There were holes in the lifeboats and from what I could learn none of them were in good shape," said Henry Stengel of Newark, N.J. "We suffered dreadfully. There was no food, no water, no light aboard the boat which carried us to the Carpathia. I saw with my own eyes two boats, loaded with passengers, go down. I can only attribute this to the bad condition of the boats.

"I have clear recollection that when we were putting off the Titanic the band was playing aboard the big ship.

"I have no praise for anything connected with the Titanic's life-saving resources."

Hays Women Land.

New York, April 19.—Mrs. Chas. M. Hays and her two daughters, Miss Margaret Hays and Mrs. Thornton Davidson, survivors of the Titanic wreck, were met at the pier by a large party of friends.

Mr. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Railway, went down with the Titanic.

In taxicabs the party went at once to the Grand Central station, where they boarded a train and proceeded to Montreal. None of them would discuss the affair.

"Before I retired," said Col. Gracie, "I had a long chat with Charles M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad. One of the last things Mr. Hays said was this: 'The White Star, the Cunard and the Hamburg-American lines are devoting their attention and ingenuity in vieing with one another to attain the supremacy in luxurious ships and in making speed records. The time will come soon when this will be checked by some appalling disaster.' Poor fellow, a few hours later he was dead."

CAPTAIN SMITH AND OFFICERS OF THE ILL FATED STEAMSHIP TITANIC.

Bad luck came to Captain E. J. Smith, commander of the Titanic, after an unbroken career of Forty-three years on the sea, during which time he worked up from apprentice to commander of the largest steamship in the world. During all this time, up to last September, when his vessel, the Olympic, crashed into the British cruiser Hawke, in the Solent, he did not figure in a single disaster. Captain Smith began his sea career in 1869. He attained the rank of Captain in 1887.

It was in 1892 that the White Star line bestowed its first great honor on Captain Smith, when it made him commander of its largest steamship, the Majestic, on her maiden voyage. Since that time he has commanded every large steamship of the White Star line on her initial trip. When he was put in command of the Titanic it was reported that he would retire after he had conducted her across the Atlantic and back

PROMINENT PASSENGERS ON BOARD THE TITANIC

CANADIANS AS HEROES

Montreal Woman With Child Stayed With Father.

New York, April 19.—A story of absorbing interest to Canadians is said to have been received by the White Star Line and given away by a clerk. It concerns the Allison family of Montreal. "Because Mr. Allison would not take to the lifeboats, but stayed behind with the men," said this clerk, "his wife and daughter also refused to leave the ship and went down with the Titanic, having first put the little boy safely in one of the boats in charge of his nurse."

"How do you know this?" the clerk was asked. He realized for the first time he was talking to two reporters. He tried to laugh off the story, but finding that impossible, admitted he got the information "inside," pointing upstairs to the executive office.

It is a fact that the family of F. J. Allison was aboard, and that neither Mrs. Allison nor Miss Allison, who were in the party, have yet been reported saved. When asked if he knew of any other story, the clerk smiled and replied that "One slip was enough for him."

The story received confirmation after the Carpathia landed. With a nine-months'-old baby wrapped in her arms, Jane Smith, an English nurse, came down the gang plank. The child was all that was left of the family of Mr. and Mrs. Allison. Mr. Allison, his wife and three-year-old daughter went down with the Titanic.

Mrs. Allison had refused to leave the side of her husband.

"Yours in deep sympathy,
"Eleanor Smith."

No More Bodies.

Boston, April 19.—A message to The Associated Press, just received from Captain Lord of the steamer Californian of the Leyland Line says:

"Arrived at the scene of Titanic disaster at 8.30 a.m. 15th. All survivors then aboard Carpathia. Have not and did not see any bodies."

"Nearer My God to Thee."

New York, April 19.—"The last I will remember of the Titanic was hearing the strains of 'Nearer My God to Thee'," said Mrs. A. A. Dick, who was saved with her husband. "There was a great sound of rushing water and the vessel sank.

"There was the wildest excitement when the ship struck. The crew at once ran to the rails to prevent passengers from jumping overboard. I was standing near the first two lifeboats launched. At first a few men struggled to gain seats. They calmed down when they saw the women and put us aboard the boats. Their bravery was wonderful. I shall never forget it."

CITIZENS OF FEZ IN REBELLION

Tangier, Morocco, April 19.—Confirmation has been received by the French commander-in-chief here of a revolt of the citizens of Fez, who were joined by mutinous Moorish troops. The outbreak was a very serious one and the efforts of the French troops stationed at the Moorish capital to quell the disturbance have not yet been successful. A number of French officers have been killed in the fighting.

The Sultan is besieged in his palace by the armed populace, and the mutinous Moorish soldiers, but despatches received here state that the foreigners are safe.

The French troops in the city number 2,000.

BOAT ARRIVALS

The Laurentic, of the White Star Dominion Line, was reported seven hundred and twenty-seven miles east of Halifax at nine o'clock yesterday morning. Due at Halifax on Saturday and Portland Sunday.

Many a married man has a chaperon in his wife.

BOTH GET PRISON

Brickford's are Found Guilty of Manslaughter---Mercy Recommended.

Cornwall, April 19.—The trial of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Bickford, charged with manslaughter at the assizes here, was resumed yesterday morning. Dr. D. O. Alguire, of Cornwall, gave an opinion as the probable cause of death in view of the evidence submitted. This concluded the case for the crown.

The prisoners were both found guilty in the evening, and were each sentenced by Mr. Justice Kelley to seven years' imprisonment with hard labor. The jury were out over an hour and brought in a verdict of "guilty," with a recommendation of mercy.

The defence called two uncles and an aunt of the deceased girl, to show that she had not been scantily clad. Then Mr. and Mrs. Bickford gave evidence on their own behalf. They denied the evidence of Mrs. Killoran, sister of Mrs. Bickford, as to the latter beating and choking the child last November, and claimed that the child was well clothed and treated as one of the family. She had been subject to weak spells, which they believed to be epileptic fits, which were becoming more frequent and more prolonged.

The deceased had one of these on the night of her death. She staggered but Bickford caught her, and after working on her for 15 or 20 minutes, without result, carried her upstairs, and went for the doctor.

HAMILTON IS BISHOP

Toronto, April 19.—By a majority of 45, Rev. Heber J. Hamilton was yesterday afternoon elected by the M. S. C. C. to the position of Bishop of Japan. There were 71 delegates present, and so his election was assured after he had received a majority of 35.

Bishop Lea, a former Canadian missionary, now bishop under the English Synod, was the second choice, and Rev. Mr. Shortt, who was understood to be the nominee of Trinity, came third. Rev. Mr. Robinson and several other missionaries were also in the running, but Mr. Hamilton's majority towered far above them all. The House of Bishops must now ratify the choice.

Rev. H. J. Hamilton was nominated by Hon. Sam Blake, who stated that he considered him the best man for the position. Another delegate proposed the name of Bishop Lea.

"I am strongly opposed to electing a bishop already elected," declared Mr. Jenkins, a delegate from Petrolea.

"Let us ballot for whom ever we like," shouted another delegate in the audience. "If the man we nominate does not want it he can refuse."

A letter from Bishop Lea was read in which he stated that he did not think he could very well make a change after being in his present position only two years.

The report of the general secretary, Rev. Canon Gould, referred briefly to the immigration into Canada, especially that from the British Isles, and also to the situation facing the Christian Church in Japan and China. The most significant features in the latter are the recent change in the seat of Government in India, from Calcutta to Delhi; the conference of leaders of Shintoism, Buddhism and Christianity in Japan; and the revolution in China, all of which have had a most important bearing on the work of Christian missions.

THE TITANIC DISASTER

The topic of uppermost concern in the world's consideration for the moment is the catastrophe to the Titanic. It was a titanic disaster in more ways than one. Until the stories come from the lips of the survivors, there is no telling how the accident happened, what order was preserved in getting the women and children off in the life-boats, and the details of the sinking of the great floating palace, must be awaited. It is now established beyond doubt that over 1200 lives were snuffed out—the greatest marine disaster in the history of the world. The circumstances were so unusual: the fact that the boat was the latest, most modern product of the ship-builders craft, that it was the maiden voyage of the steamer—all contribute to the horror, which the mind will not fully grasp until the tales are published that come from the lips of the survivors.

From the reports sent out by wireless to the steamship companies, it seems that order was well preserved on board ship by the crew. The unwritten law of the sea, that women and children have first claim to safety, was well and truly observed. Only enough men to man the life-boats were sent out. The others—and they included some of the most notable financiers and business men of the day—stayed on board, with the crew and met their oncoming doom like men. The four hours which elapsed between the time the Titanic struck the iceberg and her sinking must have been hours of agonised distress, not only for those on board who were bidding a farewell to all they held dearest on earth, but to the people in the boats, in many cases separated from their fathers and brothers and husbands. It was such a scene as is beyond the capacity of the average person to picture.

The usefulness of the wireless as a life-saver has never been better illustrated. By means of the signal C.Q.D. liners within a range of 400 miles raced for the scene in the hope that they might be able to assist. None reached the spot before the great ship had foundered, and in the eight hours before the first rescuer appeared, those in life buoys who had trusted to the waters, must have succumbed to the bitter cold of the waters. What can be done to prevent the repetition of such a disaster? They come so suddenly, so unexpectedly, that it seems useless to figure on preventive measures. If the Titanic were being raced to make a record speed, and either the designers, the builders or someone on board responsible for the catastrophe, an inquiry should apportion the blame, if there be any witnesses alive who could give evidence on the subject. Certainly, the supposition that the modern leviathan, with its water tight compartments, its double bottoms, its bulkheads, and every device for preventing sinking, is as safe as any place on land, is now shattered for good. The modern floating palace can be wrecked and sent to the bottom as quickly as a small vessel.

The British interests are already considering if the limit has not been reached in marine ship construction. The claim is brought forward that the gigantic size and consequent floatage and human burden places in the hands of one man—the captain—too large a responsibility.

THE CANADIAN LIFE BOATS

Now that the Titanic horror has called attention to the question of life-boats, what about the Canadian passenger boats on the lakes? They are boats which Canadians use constantly. They will not run into icebergs, but they may collide, or run on a rock or meet with some mishap that will make the use of the boats necessary. Wireless is lacking on them. The Toronto Telegram publishes a list of the Great Lake passenger boats, with the capacity of the life-boats. This list is quite significant. It is:

The law is being complied with but is there sufficient protection for the passengers on these boats? If as occurs on summer holidays the boats are loaded to capacity, jammed from stem to stern with a mass of humanity, and fire were to spread through the vessel getting beyond control, what would be the result? It is true that life-savers are carried but not nearly enough to provide for the big crowd that would be aboard. It is true that those cast upon the water would have a good chance of being picked up, in most cases, that the water would not be so benumbingly cold as in the ocean, but the risk seems to be there. What is to be done about it?

Coal.

Accumulated in the mines of the world there is enough coal to create 15,000,000,000 horsepower for 12,000 years.

Petroleum.

Petroleum gives us asphalt paving, permanent ink for printing, dyes of brilliant hue and all kinds of rubber articles which, without the oil, could not be manufactured.

South America.

South America is nearly twice as large as the whole of Europe.

Vinegar.

Cut hams may be kept from molding if the cut end is wet with vinegar each time after cutting. Vinegar will also keep beef fresh for a time when you happen to be without ice temporarily.

Murmur.

The easiest word to pronounce in the English language is said to be "murmur." It is simply an expulsion of the breath repeated.

The Gauls.

Gauls in remote time dressed in skins, tattooed their flesh, drank out of the skulls of their foes and treated strangers as their natural enemies. Civilization among them began in 1100.

The Willow.

The willow is one of the most adaptable plants. A willow switch merely stuck in wet suitable ground is almost certain to take root.

"WHERE WE VISITED."

The time when all our fambly goed
An' vis-u-ted a man pa knowed
When he was little most like me
'At lives at Jenkinstown, why, we Got on the cars an' rode an' rode—
A hundred miles it seemed to be!

'At man where our folks vis-u-ted
Was rich as all git out, pa said,
An' got a house 'at's bigger, law,
Than any house you ever saw—
An' lives there all alone! Ma said
She pitied him, an' so did pa.

He held me, too, an' kissed me, an'
He telled me I was quite a man
An' said he'd 'dopt, if it could be,
Some boy about the size of me.
An' first pa telled him that he can,
An' then he told him, "No, sir-e-e!"

An' next day when our fambly goed
Back home again we rode an' rode,
An' pa jist pat me on the head,
An' ma did, too, an' then they said
'At they was richer, lots, they knowed,
Than 'at pore man we vis-u-ted!
—Buffalo News.

Taking the Cure.

"Remarkable! I've been here drinking the waters only half a day, and I've gained twenty pounds already!"—Heitere Welt.

The World's Great Want.

Let the people who are trying
To establish peace on earth
Keep the white flag bravely flying
Till love has a newer birth.
But meanwhile the world is calling
For a new supply of mirth.

Let the nations join together,
So that triumph may be won.
Let men regulate the weather
And put harness on the sun.
But the world wants first the favor
Of a new supply of fun.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

Unfortunate.

Tyre Dout—I am unfortunate, mum. I had to quit my profession on account of my health.

Lady—But you look rugged. What was your profession?

Tyre Dout—Dat's just it, lady. I was too rugged. I was a ventriloquist, an' a good one, lady, an' my voice got so strong I couldn't throw it.—Harper's Magazine.

A Fair Guess.

Said the teacher to Johnnie, "What is half of one-third?"
And John, unaccustomed to such Vague things and obscure, said, "I don't know for sure,
But it can't be so awfully much."
—Woman's Home Companion.

Chapter 20

IT was a very different waking up the next day. My first thought was, "Can it be really true or is it only a dream that I'm engaged to Jim?" And I almost cried for joy when I was quite sure it was true.

We both wrote letters to my mother and so did Sally. I didn't see theirs, but I could guess what they said, and I could trust Sally to praise Jim. Still, all the praises in the world wouldn't reconcile mother to what I was going to do.

Jim had promised Mr. Trowbridge to pronounce judgment on a horse which he thought of buying, and the man who wanted to sell the creature brought it to the farm about 11 o'clock. Sally had come to tell about the letter she had just posted to mother, and Jim was in the sitting room writing his. I think he had forgotten about the horse until Mr. Trowbridge appeared, looking rather excited.

"Say, Jim," he exclaimed, "Jake Jacobsen's here with the horse. He's round by the barn now, and you might as well have a look at it; but it's an awful brute, and I ain't going to take it at any price."

"What's the matter with the horse?" asked Jim, sealing up his letter and looking interested.

"It's mad crazy, that's all, but it's enough for me. I thought there must be something wrong for Jake to be offering it at the price he did."

"I'll come," said Jim, getting up.

I jumped up too.

"Oh, please don't have anything to do with such a vicious creature," I begged. "You might be killed."

Jim laughed. "The horse isn't sired that could kill me, I reckon. I know them too well. Why, little girl, I was brought up among horses. You can trust me not to run too big risks now I've got something to make life worth living."

Stan has often told me that men hate girls to fuss over them, so I bit my lip and didn't tease any more, but I was far from happy. I didn't like the look in his eyes.

"May Sally and I go and see the horse with you?" I meekly asked.

"I'll ride him up to the house if I find he's worth your seeing," Jim said. "But you mustn't worry if we don't come this way for awhile. I may have to work with him a bit before he's ready to show himself off to ladies."

With that he got his hat and went out with Mr. Trowbridge, who was waiting with a twinkle in his eyes.

Already Jim and Mr. Trowbridge had disappeared, but as we were choosing the coolest place for our chairs we saw a dusty, nondescript old vehicle rattling up the maple avenue and just about to turn into the narrow road which leads round the side of the house.

"Visitors," said I. "I didn't know Mrs. Trowbridge was expecting"—Then I broke off, with a little gasp.

"Oh, Sally, it's"—

"The duke and Katherine!" she gurgled.

All my blood raced up to my head as if I were going to have a sunstroke. Mrs. Trowbridge and the girls were busy in the kitchen making peach jam, so when the wretched old chaise drew up close to the veranda Sally and I were alone to receive it.

If my sense of humor hadn't been trampled upon by various emotions which were all jumping about at the same time, I should have had hard work not to laugh when Stan and Mrs. Ess Kay scrambled out from under the lumbering old hood, which was like a great coal scuttle turned over their heads. Their hair was gray with dust, their faces purple with heat, and evidently they were both in towering tempers.

Stan looked at me the way he did once when I was small and spoiled his favorite cricket bat by digging up worms with it—as if he could have shaken me well and boxed my ears and would if I weren't a girl. As for Mrs. Ess Kay, she smiled, but her smile meant worse things than Stan's frown.

"Hello, dear boy!" I chirped nervously. "How do you do, Mrs. Stuyvesant-Knox?"

Sally murmured something, too, and Stan had the grace to claw off his hat, showing how damp his poor hair was on his crimson forehead, but he didn't even pretend to smile.

"A nice dance you've led us!" said he. "By Jove, I wouldn't have thought it of you, Betty!"

"Maybe you don't understand yet," said I. "Wait till I've explained, and I'm sure you won't be cross, because you always were a dear."

"It's no good wheedling," he grumbled. "I'm not going to wait for anything. We've come to take you home, and the quicker you pack up and get ready the better."

"What do you mean by home?" I inquired.

"To Mrs. Stuyvesant-Knox's house in New York, where she says she'll be good enough to put us up till the next decent ship sails for England."

"I'm not going back to Mrs. Stuyvesant-Knox's," said I. "She knows why it's impossible."

"Rot," said Stan. "She's jolly kind to have you after the way you've acted. Anybody'd think you were eight instead of eighteen. You deserve to be put on bread and water for making me come 3,000 miles to fetch you home."

"I didn't ask you to come," said I, "and you needn't have bothered. Is Vic engaged yet?"

"Yes, she is; the day before I started. What's that got to do with it?"

"A good deal, according to her," I replied. "I'm engaged too."

"The dickens you are!" exclaimed Stan, getting redder than ever, while Mrs. Ess Kay gave a little start and glared at Sally.

My blood was up now, and I didn't care what I said. The sooner Stan knew everything just as it was the better.

"Yes, the dickens I am," I echoed defiantly, "and I don't intend to be treated like a naughty child by any one. I've done nothing wrong or underhand. We've only been engaged since yesterday, though we both fell in love at first sight on shipboard, and we've written to mother and you this very morning."

"Engaged to a man you met on shipboard!" repeated Stan, looking flabber-

"A nice dance you've led us!" said he.

gasted and turning from me to Mrs. Ess Kay.

"Tom Doremus!" she gasped. "Yet no, that's impossible. He's in Newport. But there was no one else. I was particularly careful."

"I am engaged to marry Mr. James Brett," I said. "He is"—

"There was no such man on the ship," she broke in sharply.

Then suddenly she almost jumped.

"Good gracious!" she exclaimed. "Oh, duke, this is too awful. I remember there was a person in the steerage. But this is madness. It can't be"—

"He did cross in the steerage," I said. "What of it? He is the best and handsomest man I ever saw, and there's no finer gentleman than he. You can ask Sally if there is, for she knows him."

"And thoroughly approves of him," Sally finished, taking my hand. "Duke, I assure you Betty is to be congratulated. I understand that the duchess was not averse to her marrying an American, and the one she has chosen is of the very best type."

"I beg your pardon, Miss Woodburn, but hang the type," said Stan, who never did get on with Sally. "It's absolutely impossible that my sister should marry such a person, and you ought to have known better than to encourage her. This is a hundred times worse than I thought when I flung up the best shoot of the season to come and fetch you, Betty. You and I were always by way of being pals, but I agree with the mater now. You've behaved disgracefully, and as for the man, whoever he is"—

BURNED WITH LYE

Zam-Buk Brought Him Relief

George T. Ryall, 542 10th Ave. E., Vancouver, while employed at a soap works, had his foot badly burned in caustic lye. He says: "After three months of ineffectual treatment by doctors, the burn was still an open sore, so I tried Zam-Buk.

"From the very first application this brought me relief. The inflammation and poison were drawn from the wound. Then healing commenced.

"In a short time new healthy flesh filled in the wound, and my foot was quite sound again. I have proved Zam-Buk for other wounds and injuries, and in my estimation it is the finest healer in existence."

Memorial to Dufferin.

Ottawa, April 19.—In memory of Lord Dufferin, a former Governor-General of Canada, and a past member of St. Bartholomew's Anglican Church, a brass tablet will be unveiled there on Sunday, April 28, by the Duke of Connaught.

Several memorial windows decorate this place of worship, among the number being two dedicated to members of the Dufferin family, one being to Lord Ava who was killed in South Africa, and the other to Mrs. Stephens, sister to Lady Dufferin.

Mr. Dewart for Chicago.

Toronto, April 19.—Mr. Hartley Dewart, counsel for Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, had a long conference with Supt. Rogers at the Parliament Buildings yesterday afternoon. It is quite possible that Mr. Dewart will be given a little more information as to the new charges of fraud to be preferred against Dr. Nesbitt, and with that he will go to Chicago to-day to confer with Mr. Pattison, Dr. Nesbitt's agent there, and Dr. Nesbitt before deciding whether or not they will fight extradition.

It is expected that navigation will be about a month later in opening than last year.

FOUND DEAD IN HIS BUGGY

Brunetta, Alta, April 19—Garfield Nelson one of the homesteaders near here, was found dead in his buggy on Wednesday. Two men driving to McCracken's mine had lost their way and saw a ten mand buggy standing out in the middle of a slough, and went over to inquire the way. They saw a man lying over the dashboard with one foot on the ground and the other on the step of the buggy. They thought at first that he was drunk, and they shouted for some time, but not getting any response, they drove in and led the team out on dry land. Then they discovered that he was dead.

It was some time before they found anybody who could tell them who it was. He had been working for Geo. R. Plumb, the storekeeper at Brunetta, setting up machinery, and on the day in question he had gone down to Leo Herman's place to set up a new drill. He had forgotten to bring along all the pieces, and shortly after dinner he went back to the store after them. While on the way back he was overcome with heart trouble and died. His team as soon as they noticed the hand off the lines, turned into the pond to drink and remained there until found.

He came to this place about three years ago, and took up a homestead, and in a month or two more would have proved upon it. He leaves a brother, Joe Nelson, but all his other relatives are in Michigan, U.S.A. The body was taken to Carmangay, and from there was shipped back to his old home.

The new Strathroy Collegiate Institute is to be built upon the property situated on Quality Hill and comprises 9 acres of land.

The latest industry to locate in Windsor is the National Cable & Mfg. Co., a Michigan firm that manufactures lighting rods.

YOU CAN BE ABSOLUTELY SURE OF VALUES

If you carefully read the store advertisements and follow them in your buying.

Merchants advertise certain lines because they know these lines will advertise their stores. Because there is something about certain goods, they are put in conspicuous places and the people are told about them. It may be the exclusiveness or newness of design, it may be an unusual quality, it may be an attractive price.

But there is at least one definite, sure reason why a merchant advertises an article and is willing to stake the reputation of his store upon it.

Therefore, when you see an article advertised in THE REVIEW, depend upon it, that article is good value, as good value as can be obtained in that particular store.

Important Advice To SPECTACLE WEARERS

Three Plain Facts

1 That more eyes are injured by the injurious use of Glasses than by any other known cause.

2 That a great number of people are wearing spectacles unsuitable for them, and for which their eyes have not been tested.

3 That the old fashioned and unscientific method of testing the eyes by trying on various spectacles of different strengths until the sight is apparently suited, is to say the least of it, dangerous.

It cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of those who suffer from defective eye-sight that proper lenses and correctly fitting frames are absolutely essential for comfortable spectacle wearing. We grind our own lenses.

OPENING OF THE MUSEUM SHOULD BE WELL ATTENDED

As announced elsewhere, the formal opening of the museum at the Public Library, will be held on Tuesday April 23, from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. and an orchestra will be in attendance.

It is hoped that there will be as large an attendance as possible, not only to show an interest in the museum, but also as a tribute to Mr. T. A. S. Hay to whom the city is indebted more than words can adequately express for his vast amount of work and personal interest during the past years as curator of the museum.

ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY

All members are invited to attend Divine Service at St. John's Church on Sunday evening next, in conjunction with the members of the Sons of England Benefit Society, as a mark of respect to the victims of the "Titanic" disaster. A special service will be conducted by Rev. Canon Davidson.

It is earnestly hoped that all members of the society and other men in sympathy with the movement will endeavor to be present,

Chimney Fire

A chminey fire at the residence of Mr. T. J. Corbett, 336 Water street, gave the fire brigade a run yesterday at 4.50 o'clock. It was fortunate that the blaze was not more serious as the fire brigade could not find the house for several minutes. The house is the property of the Campbell Estate.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AT TORONTO

On Thursday next, at Toronto, the London Symphony Orchestra will give one of the twenty concerts to be given in America and first of the two in Canada, the other appearance being at Montral.

The Orchestra numbers about one hundred pieces, and will be conducted by Arthur Mickich, the renowned German conductor, who is the guest conductor with the Orchestra, on the invitation of the London organization.

Of those from Peterborough who will go to Toronto on Thursday next to hear the performance at Massey Hall will be Miss Choate, Miss Dean, Mr. M. Wilson, Miss Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Gliddon, all of the Conservatory of Music staff. Others will also attend being drawn by the famous orchestra, on that rare opportunity to hear it.

TWENTY-FIRST BIRTHDAY OF YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

On Friday, May 3, the local branch of the Young Women's Christian Association will be twenty-one years old.

For the evening of that date, the officers have arranged for a suitable celebration of the birthday anniversary and Miss Rose Cullen, National College Secretary, whose headquarters are at Toronto, will be a guest at the Association; and is down for an address.

But this is only part of the interesting program to be announced later. The first annual report of the Association, is in the possession of one of the officers and will be read during the program.

Twenty-one years ago, when the Association was organized in Peterboro, the office and reading room, was over the premises now occupied by Mr. T. Hooper, opposite the Princess theatre, while the boarding rooms were on Brock street. The present building is eight years old.

No doubt, the anniversary celebration will be a banner one for the officers and members and citizens in general will join in the happy event.

OBJECTIONS TO GARBAGE DUMP LOOKS LIKE TEMPEST IN TEAPOT

It is now unlikely that the meeting of North Monaghan township council will be held, as at first suggested to discuss the legality of the city's right to dispose of garbage in North Monaghan township. In conversation with a Monaghan official the Review was informed that the matter has been dropped as far as he knew, and that the city had perfect right to use the grounds providing no objectionable features followed. The Reeve had been informed of this, so the Review's informant stated, by the township solicitor, E. A. Peck. Acting on the township solicitor's advice the Reeve saw that it would be useless to call a meeting.

Regarding the Jackson property, the evident reason for it being snapped up was its exceptional value. Many eyes have been upon the lot, and numerous people could have been found, only too glad to buy it up. ionable features fol owed. The Reeve This is substantiated by the fact that only a year ago Mr. Jackson had an offer of $3,000 for it. The people of Monaghan were aroused to its value of late, however, only when it was discovered that the city had designs upon it as a dumping ground, when Reeve Howden himself purchased it.

The main objection that the Monaghan ratepayers have, to it being used as a dumping groud, is that those living in the neighborhood would be subjected to disagreeable oders.

RECEIVED URGENT LETTER AND DID NOT WAIT FOR THE TITANIC

A Review reporter who happened to be at the local Canadian Pacific Railway station this morning when the Montreal-Toronto train was passing through was given a remarkable instance of the part that "Chance" plays in our lives. While the train was at the station the reporter got into conversation with a passenger who had alighted from one of the first class cars. The passenger, who gave his name as H. J. Baker, asked for the latest information regarding the steamship "Titanic." When the reporter gave him the latest intelligence as received from New York, Mr. Baker remarked that it was only by the merest chance that he had not been a passenger on the ill-fated boat.

Mr. Baker, who is on his way from Britain to Calgary to take up a farm in the irrigation block there, has only been in this country for a short time. He landed at St. Johns, N.B., only a couple of weeks ago, coming over on one of the C.P.R. boats. Previous to sailing on the C.P.R. boat, Mr. Baker had intended travelling in the Titanic, and in fact was about to reserve accommodation in the big boat, when he received word from his son in Alberta to come out to Canada as soon as possible as the option on the western property expired on the 25th of this month. This decided Mr. Baker to travel via a Canadian line as he wished to stop over a few days with friends in Montreal before travelling further westward.

Mr. Baker stated that the steamer on which he travelled had several times been in the vicinity of ice bergs, during the trip across the Atlantic.

MR. WILT. METHERAL TO VACATE HIS POSITION AS ARMOURIES' CARETAKER

While he has not as yet received official notice that his services as caretaker at the armories, are not desired after May 1, Mr. Wilt. Metheral has been given to understand that such notice is forthcoming and he will be asked to vacate his position on that date.

The Review is informed on good authority that Mr. George Grange, deputy fire chief of the local fire department, has been recommended for the position.

formed later in the evening Uncle Sam's postage stamps were not worth a whoopin' darn in this big country. Ottawa Citizen.

London Advertiser— William Pancratz, the great little fielder on whom the local management were depending to look after the centre garden, this coming season, may not come to London after all. Pancratz it will be remembered, played with the London club last season and batted .302 in 46 games. He was suspended and later released by last season's management. This season he was one of the first men that the present management went after, and his contract was the first to come in signed. However, the local management have received a letter from him, in which he states that his wife is offering serious objections to his playing ball this summer and as he has a good position in Detroit, it is not likely he will be able to join the London team. The letter came as a great surprise to the local directors, who were fully confident that they would have one of the sensations in the league in Pancratz this summer. When last heard from he reported that he was in fine shape and was looking forward to appearing in a London uniform this season. here was no word of any objections against him playing, and the letter received from him this week came as a bolt out of a clear sky to the directors of the London Club.

(By Billy Evans.)

Frequently the papers mention that So and So was spoked by Ty Cobb. After one of these spiking episodes the question is asked me a thousand times, "Does Cobb try to injure players?"

Because Cobb ("The Peach") figures in many spiking incidents the public gets the idea that he wilfully tries to injure infielders to get a base, and create fear so that the next time he slides the guardian will be afraid.

In answer to the question, I always say that Cobb never intentionally injured a player.

While it may seem that Cobb deliberately tries to injure a player, such is not the case. Few players after the excitement of the pennant race has passed, will say Cobb tries to put players out of the running.

I have heard infielders admit that they, not Cobb, were responsible for an accident. When Cobb slides he is a hard man to figure. If the player guesses correctly all is well, but if he judges the slide poorly, it is probable he will suffer.

Cobb has a slide all his own. His fallaway is the work of a master. It needs an artist to show up Cobb's slide, as his slide shows up the average infielder.

I like to see Bobby Wallace take the throw when Ty attempts to steal. It is a clash between two master workmen. Wallace is an adept at taking a throw with the gloved hand, no matter where the ball goes.

Instead of letting Cobb play him, Wallace plays Cobb. It is a treat to see him get the ball in his gloved hand, go up the line to meet Ty, who comes in with terrific force, hook the ball under his leg, and often make him miss the bag by a foot.

Unlike the average base-runner, Cobb does not slow up before starting his slide. He hits the turf under full steam. One of his legs is thrown in the direction of the bag, the other is in the air, while his body is away from the baseman.

RAIN CAUSED POSTPONMENT OF INTERNATIONAL OPENERS

Jersey City, N.J., April 18.—It is more than likely that the local International League season will get under way here to-morrow. After almost 24 hours' continuous downpour the rain has ceased, and a brisk wind has blown up. This wind will go a great way towards drying up the grounds, although they will still be far from dry if play is called to-morrow. The Kelly squad spent the day in idleness, some lounging about the hotel, while others sought recreation in the theatres.

"Tim" Jordan and "Dic" Rudolph piloted some of their team mates up to the Bronx and showed what a big place that portion of New York City is. Almost all the Leafs will attend the Barnum and Bailey circus at Madison Square Garden this evening. The New York Nationals are to be guests of the management, and the Kelleyites have also been invited to go along. Benny Meyers is to give an exhibition on the proper way to feed peanuts to elephants.

Jack Thoney, who has been somewhat of a hold-out this year, reported to Manager Schafly this morning. He has no chance to secure a regular job with the Pests because of his bad arm, and he will probably be sold to a New York State League club. Mayor Wittpenn of this city, will pitch the first ball of the 1912 season over the plate to-morrow.

His Umps

WALKING

E. J. Webb, the noted English walker, just returned home from Canada, says in Sporting Life:

"My opinion of Goulding? You have had that before. The best walker I have ever seen; perfectly fair. I can't compare him with anybody you know; he has a low action, like Larner, but his style is his own, and must be seen to be understood.

"I see that Murray has walked a mile in 6 min. 22 4-5 sec. in Australia. I can scarcely understand that he is better than Goulding, but then if I had not seen the Canadian I should never have believed that he could walk as he does, and set up such fast times. For the future this little island will be good enough for me. The Colonies are suited for younger men; the young fellow with a trade who does not mind going away up country and burying himself is all right, but I am too fond of sociability for that, and in the towns one is just as well off here.

JOHNSON AND FLYNN TO MEET ON JULY 4TH

Chicago, April 19.—Jack Johnson and Jim Flynn will fight 45 rounds for the world's championship at Las Vegas, N.M., on the afternoon of July 4th. This announcement has been made by Jack Curley, promoter of the contest.

Work of constructing the arena, Curley said, would begin by May 1. Both Flynn and Johnson have agreed to be on the scene a month before the fight. Curley said that Johnson already had begun light training, and that Flynn would start active work soon.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

Secretary Davidson received the schedule of the Canadian League last evening, but it cannot be published until a later date.

Louis Cook, manager of the Ottawa Baseball Club, breezed into town a few hours of schedule last night. The leader of the Senators in the Canadian League this season, was not expected till sometime to-day, hence he started off by stealing a base first dash out of the box.

Without spreading a eulogy on our prominent athletic guest, it is not amiss to say Louis is a well set up young man of medium height and a delightfully unassuming manner. He possesses that fine steel grey eye that denotes determination and flashes a set of molars when he smiles that would shame the trade mark of a popular tooth paste.

Louis, however, recorded his first error half an hour after he hit the town. He mailed a post card with an American stamp. He was informed later in the evening Uncle Sam's postage stamps were not worth a whoopin' darn in this big country.

Committee of Titanic Survivors Present a Statement.

They Protest Against the Insufficiency of Lifeboats, Rafts, etc., the Lack of Trained Boat Handlers, Shortage of Officers and Number of Passengers Permitted and Urge U. S. Government to Take Action.

New York, April 19.—The following statement, issued by a committee of the surviving passengers was given the press on the arrival of the Carpathia: "We, the undersigned surviving passengers from the Steamship Titanic, in order to forestall any sensational or exaggerated statements, deem it our duty to give to the press a statement of facts which have come to our knowledge and which we believe to be true.

"On Sunday, April 14, at about 11.40 p.m., on a cold, starlit night, in a smooth sea and with no moon, the ship struck an iceberg, which had been reported to the bridge by lookouts, but not early enough to avoid collision. Steps were taken to ascertain the damage and save passengers and ship. Orders were given to put on life-belts, and the boats were lowered. The ship sank at about 2.20 p.m. Monday and the usual distress signals were sent out by wireless and rockets fired at intervals from the ship.

"Fortunately, the wireless message was received by the Cunard steamship Carpathia at about 12 o'clock midnight, and she arrived on the scene of the disaster at about 4 a.m. Monday.

"The officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia had been preparing all night for the rescue and comfort of the survivors, and all were received on board with the most touching care and kindness, every attention being given to all irrespective of class. The passengers, officers and crew gave up gladly their staterooms, clothing and comforts for our benefit, all honor to them."

"The English Board of Trade passengers' certificate on board the Titanic, allowed for a total approximately 3,500. The same certificate called for lifeboat accommodation for approximately 950 in the following boats: Fourteen large lifeboats, two smaller boats and four collapsible boats. Life preservers were accessible and apparently in sufficient number for all on board.

"The approximate number of passengers carried at the time of the collision was:

First class, 330; second class, 320; third class, 750—total, 1,400. Officers and crew, 940—total, 2,340. Of the foregoing about the following were rescued by the S. S. Carpathia:

First class, 210; second class, 125; third class, 200; officers, 4; seamen, 39; stewards, 96; firemen, 71. Total, 210 of crew. The total about 775 saved was about 80 per cent. of the maximum capacity of the lifeboats.

"We feel it our duty to call the attention of the public to what we consider the inadequate supply of life-saving appliances provided for on modern steamships, and recommend that immediate steps be taken to compel passenger steamers to carry sufficient boats to accommodate the maximum number of people carried on board. The following facts were observed and should be considered in this connection: The insufficiency of lifeboats, rafts, etc., lack of trained seaman to man same (stokers, stewards, etc., are not efficient boathandlers); not enough officers to carry out emergency orders on the bridge and superintend the launching and control of life boats; absence of searchlights.

"The Board of Trade rules allow for entirely too many people in each boat to permit the same to be properly handled. On the Titanic the boat deck was about 75 feet above water, and consequently the passengers were required to embark before lowering the boats, thus endangering the operation and preventing the taking on of the maximum number the boats would hold. Boats at all times should be properly equipped with provisions, water, lamps, compasses, lights, etc. Life-saving boat drills should be more frequent and thoroughly carried out, and officers should be armed at boat drills. There should be a greater reduction in speed in fog and ice, as damage if collision actually occurs is liable to be less. In conclusion, we suggest that an international conference be called to recommend the passage of identical laws providing for the safety of all at sea, and we urge the United States Government to take the initiative as soon as possible."

Although the foregoing was given out as a signed statement by a committee of passengers, their signatures were omitted, attendant upon the confusion when the Carpathia docked.

Ismay Welcomes Inquiry.

New York, April 19.—J. Bruce Ismay left the ship at about 11.15 last night and went to the rear of the dock, where the officers of the Cunard Line are located. He was guarded by detectives and only a limited number of newspaper men were admitted to his room. In his statement, he said:

"I heartily welcome the most complete and exhaustive inquiry and any assistance that I or my associates or our builders or navigators can render is at the service of the public and the Government of both the United States and Great Britain."

Captain's Widow's Message.

London, April 19.—The widow of Captain Smith, the commander of the Titanic, has written a pathetic message, which was posted yesterday outside the White Star office. It reads:

"To my poor fellow-sufferers: My heart overflows with grief for you all and is laden with sorrow that are weighed down with the terrible burden that has been thrust upon us. May God be with us and comfort us all.

the boat by breaking through a port hole on a lower deck. But instead, I swung out and down on a loose halyard and landed safely in the boat. When we were within three feet of the water, I suddenly noticed the plug wasn't in the bottom and we put it in before we struck the water. Two other boats however, were swamped because the plug hole was not stopped up, though their occupants were saved by the other boats.

"Just before I slid down to the lifeboat Mr. Hays said to me:

"'Peuchen, this boat is good for eight hours. I have that from the best authority, and we will be rescued before then.'

"When I got down in the small boat I saw the Titanic was doomed, for all the skin had been torn along her side, letting in the water everywhere.

"There was no panic, except I heard that when the last boat was being launched, the officers had to threaten with revolvers to keep the men out. I heard Mr. Ismay was saved in this boat. But there certainly had been no adequate training of the crew for such an emergency as confronted us.

"The seaman in charge refused to return for more passengers when parted from the Titanic. He made a scene before the women, asking what was the use of returning for a lot of 'stiffs.' Then he mistook lights in the sky for beacons, and asked whether there weren't any buoys about. He took brandy from some of the women and wraps from others for himself, and he refused to take a turn at the oars and permit a woman to steer, saying he was in charge of the boat. I complained to the second officer about him, and I am told he is to be court-martialed."

As we were moving away from the ship, the band played ragtime selections, but the last strains we heard were "Nearer My God To Thee." We found a stowaway in our boat, an Italian steerage passenger with a broken arm. In another boat four Japanese from the steerage were discovered after the boat got to the water.

"At 3.45 we spied a light five miles away. It was the Carpathia. She remained there, and we rowed to her and were saved. But before then I heard two explosions on the Titanic about an hour after we left her, and then she went down, while awful cries came out from her decks. It was bitterly cold in the icy water and we all suffered."

formed later in the evening Uncle Sam's postage stamps were not worth a whoopin' darn in this big country. Ottawa Citizen.

London Advertiser— William Pancratz, the great little fielder on whom the local management were depending to look after the centre garden, this coming season, may not come to London after all. Pancratz it will be remembered, played with the London club last season and batted .302 in 46 games. He was suspended and later released by last season's management. This season he was one of the first men that the present management went after, and his contract was the first to come in signed. However, the local management have received a letter from him, in which he states that his wife is offering serious objections to his playing ball this summer and as he has a good position in Detroit, it is not likely he will be able to join the London team. The letter came as a great surprise to the local directors, who were fully confident that they would have one of the sensations in the league in Pancratz this summer. When last heard from he reported that he was in fine shape and was looking forward to appearing in a London uniform this season, here was no word of any objections against him playing, and the letter received from him this week came as a bolt out of a clear sky to the directors of the London Club.

(By Billy Evans.)

Frequently the papers mention that So and So was spiked by Ty Cobb. After one of these spiking episodes the question is asked me a thousand times, "Does Cobb try to injure players?"

Because Cobb ("The Peach") figures in many spiking incidents the public gets the idea that he wilfully tries to injure infielders to get a base, and create fear so that the next time he slides the guardian will be afraid.

In answer to the question, I always say that Cobb never intentionally injured a player.

While it may seem that Cobb deliberately tries to injure a player, such is not the case. Few players after the excitement of the pennant race has passed, will say Cobb tries to put players out of the running.

I have heard infielders admit that they, not Cobb, were responsible for an accident. When Cobb slides he is a hard man to figure. If the player guesses correctly all is well, but if he judges the slide poorly, it is probable he will suffer.

Cobb has a slide all his own. His fallaway is the work of a master. It needs an artist to show up Cobb's slide, as his slide shows up the average infielder.

I like to see Bobby Wallace take the throw when Ty attempts to steal. It is a clash between two master workmen. Wallace is an adept at taking a throw with the gloved hand, no matter where the ball goes.

Instead of letting Cobb play him, Wallace plays Cobb. It is a treat to see him get the ball in his gloved hand, go up the line to meet Ty, who comes in with terrific force, hook the ball under his leg, and often make him miss the bag by a foot.

Unlike the average base-runner, Cobb does not slow up before starting his slide. He hits the turf under full steam. One of his legs is thrown in the direction of the bag, the other is in the air, while his body is away from the baseman.

RAIN CAUSED POSTPONMENT OF INTERNATIONAL OPENERS

Jersey City, N.J., April 18.—It is more than likely that the local International League season will get under way here to-morrow. After almost 24 hours' continuous downpour the rain has ceased, and a brisk wind has blown up. This wind will go a great way towards drying up the grounds, although they will still be far from dry if play is called to-morrow. The Kelly squad spent the day in idleness, some lounging about the hotel, while others sought recreation in the theatres.

"Tim" Jordan and "Dic" Rudolph piloted some of their team mates up to the Bronx and showed what a big place that portion of New York City is. Almost all the Leafs will attend the Barnum and Bailey circus at Madison Square Garden this evening. The New York Nationals are to be guests of the management, and the Kelleyites have also been invited to go along. Benny Meyers is to give an exhibition on the proper way to feed peanuts to elephants.

Jack Thoney, who has been somewhat of a hold-out this year, reported to Manager Schafly this morning. He has no chance to secure a regular job with the Pests because of his bad arm, and he will probably be sold to a New York State League club. Mayor Wittpenn, of this city, will pitch the first ball of the 1912 season over the plate to-morrow

E. J. Webb, the noted English walker, just returned home from Canada, says in Sporting Life:

"My opinion of Goulding? You have had that before. The best walker I have ever seen; perfectly fair. I can't compare him with anybody you know; he has a low action, like Larner, but his style is his own, and must be seen to be underscod.

"I see that Murray has walked a mile in 6 min. 22 4-5 sec. in Australia. I can scarcely understand that he is better than Goulding, but then if I had not seen the CCanadian I should never have believed that he could walk as he does, and set up such fast times. For the future this little island will be good enough for me. The Colonies are suited for younger men; the young fellow with a trade who does not mind going away up country and burying himself is all right, but I am too fond of sociability for that, and in the towns one is just as well off here.

JOHNSON AND FLYNN TO MEET ON JULY 4TH

Chicago, April 19.—Jack Johnson and Jim Flynn will fight 45 rounds for the world's championship at Las Vegas, N.M., on the afternoon of July 4th. This announcement has been made by Jack Curley, promoter of the contest.

Work of constructing the arena, Curley said, would begin by May 1. Both Flynn and Johnson have agreed to be on the scene a month before the fight. Curley said that Johnson already had begun light training, and that Flynn would start active work soon.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

Secretary Davidson received the schedule of the Canadian League last evening, but it canno. be published until a later date.

Louis Cook, manager of the Ottawa Baseball Club, breezed into town a few hours of schedule last night. The leader of the Senators in the Canadian League this season, was not expected till sometime to-day, hence he started off by stealing a base first dash out of the box.

Without spreading a eulogy on our prominent athletic guest, it is not amiss to say Louis is a well set up young man of medium height and a delightfully unassuming manner. He possesses that fine steel grey eye that denotes determination and flashes a set of molars when he smiles that would shame the trade mark of a popular tooth paste.

Louis, however, recorded his first error half an hour after he bit the town. He mailed a post card with an American stamp. He was in-

Committee of Titanic Survivors Present a Statement.

PLANS FOR THE MUD LAKE BRIDGE

Plans have just been filled with Mr. McNeillie, County Clerk, for the reconstruction of Mud Lake Narrows Bridge, in the township of Carden. The plans which have been prepared by Mr. G. Smith, O.L.S., of Lindsay, County Engineer, and approved by the Provincial Engineer of Highways, disclose new ideas in the construction of highway bridges.

Instead of building high concrete piers in the bridge site basin, and sparring these with steel trusses, as has been formerly done, the scheme is to fill the basin fourteen feet deep, with riprap, up to the elevation of the adjoining bottom of the lake. A dry wall of flat stone eighteen feet wide on top is then built upon this riprap fill, through which are three openings, spanned by "Reinforced Concrete Slab Top Beam Span Bridges."

There is no metal exposed to view in this bridge, with the exception of the railings which consist of lines of tubing secured to metal railing posts set in concrete, which lend a handsomely finished appearance to the structure. The main feature in the design of this bridge, is maximum durability at a minimum of expense the cost being only one-third of that originally estimated. — Lindsay Post.

COUNTY COUNCIL MIGHT MAKE GRANT TO THE LIBRARY

The following is an extract from the report of the local librarian on the meeting of the O.L.A., which was read at the meeting of the Public Library Board last night:

It was decided to communicate with the various County Councils of Ontario in regard to giving an annual grant of $50 a year to all Free Libraries within their borders, and $25 a year to those that are not free. In regard to this matter I may say that I am of the opinion that nothing but good can result from public libraries in cities keeping in touch and sympathy with residents of the county. In our own library we have several subscribers from outside the city limits, but we could be of service to many more if the County Council would come to our aid with a moderate annual grant. I advocated approaching our County Council on this very point last year, and was rather surprised to find the matter brought up as a live topic in this year's Association meeting.

The question of infected books was also brought up, and we find that it is the custom of other libraries to stand the loss of these, and not to saddle it on those in whose houses infectious or contagious diseases have occurred. The Medical Health Officer is also looked to to give the Librarian notice of any house where such a disease has broken out.

I am, yours respectfully,
FRED M. DELAFOSSE.

SOME WATER DAMAGE DONE ALONG THE RIVER; ERRORS OF JUDGMENT

As was to be expected, the flood of the river is seriously high, and not as yet in full. It is a trying time for works that have stood years of service, and a perilous time for some recently constructed. Word comes that the dam at Lakefield is being severely tried in that it holds back the pressure of water so far up as Young's Point. Should it give way there would be serious consequences for the several dams below. One other of those lower down is being temporarily strengthened against further or sudden pressure. Word from the north says that the ice is now coming out of Jack's Creek and eel creek, both of which will let down a large expanse of water to swell the volume of Stony Lake. Even now the bar at the entrance to Indian River is flooded, and if the lake should rise any higher, the water will revert to its ancient channel and pour down through Dummer and Otonabee to Rice Lake, flooding the farm lands.

Fortunately, the configuration of the surface of the country hereabouts is undulating and any rush of water will be confined between hills. No such loss can occur as in the West in the valleys of the Thames or Grand Rivers. There the country is flat. Following the heavy snow fall, the flood may be expected. Could the water be conserved and held to the north there would be ample supply for power purposes for all the year and to defy the dryest season of a dry summer. Only a comparatively limited quantity can, as yet, be impounded, despite the fairly liberal work that has been done in the interests of water saving. The level at Rye's boat-house, below the lower lock, varies from low water in August or November to flood in early May by about eight feet. This shows an immense body of water going to waste.

Just to show what it can do to bother people, the river has deliberately gone about making trouble for the Public Works Department. This department has care over maintenance of wharves, dams, and other things not a part of the Trent canal system, though indirectly contributing to its usefulness.

Last Fall, a part of the old Rogers dam was rebuilt. This dam is useless for power purposes, though it had quite a function in this respect in the early days. The purpose of the renovation was to allow of sufficient water being impounded between this dam and the Hydraulic Power Company dam above to allow of timber and logs being floated down the river. Without the Rogers dam, the stretch of river bed, now a raging torrent, would be practically dry in August.

Those who built and placed this repair or extension, displayed what is termed an error of judgment. Errors of judgment are those things that cost about five hundred dollars to fix up and for which the other fellow pays. When the man who does the work has to pay for it, then the error is termed a blunder. The bank against which the crib work impinged is a very fine deposit of gravel, and has been used by the [illegible] Ward as a gravel pit for years. This fact was apparent and the gravel stuck out all over the territory. Good judgment in such work would have built the crib into the bank and faced the junction with clay, to head off any little freshet from undermining the bank. This was not done, the crib being brought to meet the gravel and left there unsealed. It might have stood any ordinary Spring rise of water, likely as not. Anyway, thirty feet of the bank has gone, the river is eating its way around the crib and doing fine hydraulic excavation where it is not needed. Little can be accomplished until the water goes down. In the meantime, real estate is dropping every [illegible]. These errors of judgment come high.

Down at the new wharf there is trouble. Another error of judgment this time as to bottom facts. The north wall is toppling over and dragging the anchor piers with it. The impelling cause is said to be the scour of the water from the creek, this year unusually severe. In fact this creek deserves to be suppressed. It has eaten away the support for the foundation of the Phelan Hotel at one corner. Not very serious, but an indication of what it could do if not restrained.

The wall of the wharf at the corner to the south has had a fair sized piece taken off, and slipped to the bottom of the river. Repairs are now being made and this is new work. The foundation of the wall is probably at fault. The place is only what is left of an old swamp. It may have been assumed that a stable bottom had been reached in the dredging, but so far as opinion goes, was not. Some facts could have been ascertained, if there were doubt, by looking up the records in the City engineer's office showing the depth and character of the soil which developed at the time of laying the George street sewer, for the sewer is lower than the footings of the wall of the wharf. Engineering, while not an exact science, goes ahead with few misgivings, when private enterprise pays the shot. It would seem that public undertakings are prone to errors of judgment. Lots of it. The Romaine street sewer is an example, and now two more.

PETERBOROUGH INDUSTRIAL.

Considerable interest is already displayed in the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition for this year, which will be held on September 12th, 13th and 14th. A letter has been received from J. Lockie Wilson, superintendent of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, in reference to the field crop competition this year.

Last year there were 104 societies competed in field crop competitions. Owing to the heavy expense of supplying judges, the number of entries to be accepted this year has been limited to one hundred and seventy. The total prizes to be offered by the society this year is $75 instead of $50 as in past years. Of this amount $50 is contributed by the Dominion Government and the remaining $25 by the Agricultural Societies. The division of prize money is as follows:

First, $20; 2nd, $15; 3rd, $12; 4th, $10; 5th, $8; 6th, $6; 7th, $4.

The competition in every Society is limited to one crop only, and fields entered must consist in area of not less than five acres and not more than twelve. It is limited to members of an Agricultural Society, and fields entered must be not less than fifteen miles from headquarters. Entries must be in by May 1st.

MUSEUM AT PUBLIC LIBRARY OPEN TO THE CITIZENS NEXT TUESDAY

At a special meeting of the Public Library Board last night it was decided to open the museum at the Library on Thursday, April 23rd.

There were present Messrs. W. G. Morrow, chairman; E. H. D. Hall, H. Ritchie, D. Spence, J. Corkery, T. F. Matthews, H. R. H. Kenner, and A. Mowat.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from Mr. T. A. S. Hay, with reference to the removal of the curios of the museum to the Library and the placing of the same in the building.

OPENING OF MUSEUM.

It was decided to have the museum open to the public every afternoon during the week from 2 to 6 p.m., and every Saturday from 7 to 10 p.m., and that a formal opening be held on the evening of Tuesday, 23rd inst., from 7 to 10 p.m. The arranging for the opening and the program for the evening was left in the hands of the Property Committee. The general public is cordially invited to be present.

The report of the librarian on the work of the Ontario Library Association meeting held in Toronto Monday and Tuesday, 8th and 9th inst., which on motion was received. Mr. Corkery read the report of the Finance Committee recommending the payment of a number of accounts, which was adopted.

Mr. Matthews reported verbally on several matters in connection with the building and grounds, and the Property Committee was authorized to have the grounds put in shape, a temporary fence erected to protect the lawn, and some other minor repairs and improvements alluded to.

The Finance Committee was requested to apply to the City Council for the balance of the money derived from the sale of Mrs. Nicholls' Estate, to be handed over to the Board.

The best way of taking care of the maps received from the Dominion Government from time to time was referred to the Library Committee to consider and report on.

The librarian reported that Dr. King had donated a valuable work Greek and Roman Antiquities, and several other volumes to the Library, and the Board desired that their thanks be tendered to Dr. King for these very much appreciated additions to the library.

The meeting then adjourned.

CROSSEN CAR COMPANY MAY LEAVE COBOURG

Hamilton, April 19— Another big concern has practically decided to locate here. It is the Crossen Car Co., of Cobourg, and although it is not definitely known whether it will remove its entire plant to this city it is understood that it will erect large buildings and employ a lot of men. The company's object in locating here is said to be to get a large slice of the electric car building business of this city and western Ontario, as well as some of the C.N.R. work. The only matter at present unsettled is the deal for a site.

A VISIT TO THE FREE HALL OF LEARNING

Advantageously located in one of the prettiest and most convenient sections of the city, and surrounded by spacious grounds, already giving promise of an attractive summer appearance, the Peterborough Public Library, is rapidly assuming a leading position amongst similar institutions throughout the province. From an exterior view, the Library presents aspects that commend it most favorably to the general eye, and visitors are much impressed by the architectural and landscape skill, which has obviously been devoted upon it, and which is laregly responsible for its handsome appearance. The grounds this summer, will undoubtedly be the object of great admiration for with the shrubs, grass, flower plots, and hedges, which, mainly through the instrumentality of Ald. Duncan have been planted, and which should have attained a healthy growth by early summer, nothing is missing, which might assist in enhancing the appearance, and adding to the general attractiveness of the structure. It is expected that a fence or hedge will also be placed at the north side of the building, to prevent small boys from treading upon and spoiling the grass, which is as yet, in the infant stage.

Inside the building, an inspection of every room and department will only further strengthen the favorable impression gathered by the exterior contemplation. A Review representative was most courteously received by the librarian to-day, who escorted him over the entire building from basement to attic. As has been noted occasionally before, a silence, befitting and exacting is maintained in the public reading rooms. A morning visit is apt to discover a few of those, who evidently people of leisure, perhaps some out of steady employment, and find the literature of the library, a medium by which to drown their heavy feelings, or pass away the hours which must otherwise hang burdensome. Then there are a couple of patrons who are always there; old people whose only means of recreation is reading. To those the library is indeed a boon. One elderly gentleman regularly falls asleep, basking in the sunlight, should any filter in, and protecting his bald head with a white handkerchief. After working hours and between school periods, the reading room is heavily patronized. It is then that the stringency of the law "no talking" hits hard, but the feelings of each other are generally respected. Rarely now, does F. M. De la Fosse, the courteous librarian, have occasion to frown upon, or speak to any would-be violators of the necessary rule. The class of literature and reading matter upon the tables embrace nearly every magazine, or periodical of recognized worth that is desired by the people of to-day. These include works of reference, and electrical and mechanical publications and everything that reflects current events. By no means to be overlooked are the newspaper racks, from which hang all the big Canadian and American dailies, including the local papers.

The second floor will be a big surprise to the crowds who will be on hand next Tuesday evening at the opening. The museum, formerly placed at Inverlea Park has been most effectively arranged in one of the up-stair rooms, and in the wide hall-way, with sections of it placed on the front stairways. Visitors now as they mount the stairs will be confronted with racks, from which hang pistols used in the days of Wellington and Napoleon, breast-plates and helmets picked from the field of Waterloo, and with heavy antique fire-arms and swords. The other museum exhibits placed in cases will be worthy of hours of interested observation.

Other rooms on the second floor are the lecture hall, the Board room and the teachers' room, all elegantly fitted up.

The basement is exceedingly roomy and is kept in spick and span shape A bit of dust is as abhorrent to the careful caretaker, as are the measles to a shool-boy. One part of the basement contains books, worn out and with pages or covers missing. They have outlived their usefulness or been replaced on the library shelves by new volumes, and large numbers of these annually are sent to the lumbermen and other isolated folks, as camp-fire reading. Some books also are on these shelves by authors whose works were a little too "spicy" for select reading, and the vigilant eye of the librarian promptly pounces upon these, and they are excluded from the library shelves. The responsibility borne by a librarian in this way is quite heavy. For instance, one book was taken out of the library by a little girl, and apparently her father's eye must have fallen upon it, for later Mr. Dela Fosse received a complaint from an angry parent, condemning the book in no gentle terms. With a librarian it is a case of eternal vigilance is the price of freedom from naughty books.

The strongest impression gathered from a tour of the building, is its orderliness, and the neat manner in which the entire institute is carried on. There are little schemes for the caring and handling of books, which reveal ingenuity and activity on the part of the librarian for their welfare, and an endeavor to cater in every detail to the numerous requests of patrons.

NET RATES FOR POWER AND LIGHT BY ORILLIA'S MUNICIPALLY OWNED PLANT

We print in full the new schedule of power and light rates adopted by the Orillia Town Council, as issued by those running the municipally-owned plant. Orillia for some years has been offering cheap power, as low as $16.00 per h.p. in small or large blocks. The new schedule raises the minimum for 10 h.p. and over to $24.00 per h.p.

The schedule does not state the reasons for the advance, but it may be assumed that the commercial charges for generation and investment and upkeep have advanced, or are now being correctly determined. The rates are here printed so that Peterborough may make comparisons. There is, of course, a gross and a net rate, the net rate being about 20 per cent. reduction on the gross rate. To make the matter as clear as possible we give the net rates only:—

POWER RATES.

Ten-Hour Power Rates—Motors from one to ten-horse power shall be charged at the rated capacity of the motor.

1 to 3 horse power, per annum—$28.00.

Over 3, up to and including 10 horse power, per annum—$24.00.

Over 10 horse power, at actual current consumption on basis of maximum twenty minute peak by kilo-volt ampere measurement—$18.40.

Twenty-Four-Hour Power Rates—Twenty-four hour power rates shall be $7.00 per horse power per annum additional to the ten-hour power rates.

1 to 3 horse power, per annum—$33.60.

Over 3, up to and including 10 horse power, per annum—$35.96.

Over 10 horse power, per annum—24.00.

Meter Rates for Power—A fixed charge on capacity installed plus a meter rate.

1 to 10 horse power inclusive, fixed charge per horse power per annum on capacity of motor—$8.80.

10 horse power and over, fixed charge per horse power per annum on actual current used on twenty-minute peak by kilo-volt ampere measurement—$7.20.

THE TRAGEDY ON THE OCEAN AS TOLD BY MAJOR PEUCHEN

Passengers Joked at First at the Striking of the Berg By Boat.

New York, Friday, April 19.—Maj. Peuchen, interviewed by The Mail and Empire correspondent at the Waldorf Hotel this morning, gave the following story of the disaster:

"We had a specially good dinner Sunday night, and I didn't leave the table until 10 o'clock. I went into the smoking-room, and a little after 11 I retired to my cabin. I had just got into the room when a jar shook the Titanic, not like a collision with an iceberg, but more like a great tidal wave. The vessel trembled as a small boat would when hit by a comber. I argued that the night was so quiet it couldn't possibly be a wave, and I went on deck to investigate. Other people were on the deck, and I heard them joking one another over the fact that we had hit an iceberg. A berg 75 feet high had collided with us and swept along the starboard side, sending ice flying into the port-holes and heaping it on the forward deck.

"I went back into the companion hall and met Mr. C. M. Hays there. I told him about the ice on the boat's bow, and we went together to see the sights. Mr. Hays expressed the opinion it was nothing of importance, but I noticed the Titanic was beginning to list, and I wasn't so sure. A few minutes after people began to come out of the ship's interior, and I heard the call shouted for everybody to put on life preservers.

I had on my evening clothes and realized that if there were to be a wreck I must be warmly clad. I returned to my cabin and changed all my things putting on two sets of underwear and an old suit. I looked round the room with a final glance, and put in my tie this large pearl pin you see. There were a number of valuable presents in my grip I was bringing home to my family, and in my trunk were $200,000 in bonds and $170,000 in stocks, all registered, of course. Three oranges were on the table in the room, and they were the only things I pocketed.

The room steward met me as I was leaving and helped me put on the life preserver around my overcoat. There was a solemn procession of men and sobbing women moving to the deck. The lifeboats were being swung out but only scratch crews were assembled, causing much confusion. They did not seem to know how to handle the boats. I got into one boat myself and took out the mast and sail to give more room, and then I got out and helped the women to scramble in.

"I was on thje port side. The first boat lowered was not filled, because there weren't enough women around it to meet its capacity, and none of the men were allowed to enter. The second boat was lowered in the same unfilled condition. The third boat had been lowered 60 ft, when the captain and second officer, who were standing by, noticed only two sailors had got in to care for the 2 women the boat contained.

"Two man can't manage that boat," I said.

The captain replied to me: "You go. Can you get down there?"

I answered I was somewhat of a sailor and could manage the boat. The captain suggested that I get to

SOME OF THE TITANIC'S CREW ON RETURN TO THEIR HOMES

Twenty-Two Are Held for the Investigation—Laurentic Did Not Make Any Rescues—Olympic Passengers Receive First Word of Disaster and Subscribe $7,500.

Special to the Review.

New York, April 20.—One hundred and eighty members of the crew of the Titanic sailed for England to-day on the Lapland. Twenty-two, including all the officers saved, are held here to await the pleasure of the Senate Investigating Committee.

Halifax, N.S., April 20.—The faint hope that there might be other survivors of the Titanic were practically dissipated to-day when the steamer Laurentic wirelessed that she had seen no sign of rafts, wreckage or bodies while crossing Grand Banks. It is suggested that the Laurentic may have chosen a more southerly route than usal on account of ice fields, and that the cable ship Mackay Bennett may succeed in picking up at least some bodies.

Plymouth, Eng., April 20.—Steamer Olympic arrived here to-day and her passengers learned for the first time when the English papers were brought aboard, the details of the disaster which had overtaken her sister ship. Although wireless requests for information were held up, passengers do not attribute this to any desire on the part of officers to establish censorship. A fund of seventy-five hundred dollars for survivors was raised in a few minutes.

THE OFFICIAL PROBE OPENS

Ismay and Officers Are Forbidden to Go Away.

Officer Lightholder Says He Also Went Down With the Vessel But Was Saved, as Col Gracie Was—Ismay Tells of His Escape From the Sinking Steamer After He Was Told the Women Were All Off.

New York, April 20.—The seriousness of the enquiry by the Senate investigating committee into the Titanic disaster was disclosed last night when Senator Smith of Michigan, chairman of the committee, at first flatly refused to let any of the officers or the 200 odd members of the crew of the sunken steamship get beyond the jurisdiction of the U. S. Government. The men were all to have sailed to-day on the Red Star liner Lapland. Later it was settled that the greater part of the crew would be permitted to sail, but that twelve men and four officers among the survivors now under subpoena, together with Mr. Ismay, would not be permitted to depart.

The intention of the committee was made clear at adjournment, when, with Alfred Crawford, a bedroom steward, on the stand, Senator Smith, pleaded weariness.

"We have been at this all day and into the night," he said, "and I believe we had better cease until to-morrow. I am not through with Mr. Crawford yet and would like to question him further to-morrow, together with other members of the crew and the officers.

C. C. Burlingham, counsel for the White Star Line, interposed.

"There are 200 men who are to sail to-morrow,' 'he said, "surely the committe does not intend to hold them. We are perfectly willing to pledge the presence of the four officers and the twelve men desired by the committee, but these men are entitled to return to their homes."

"I am not prepared to permit that," said the Senator. "We cannot say whom we may want and they cannot go."

"We cannot care for them, then," retorted Mr. Burlingham. "When the Lapland sails we shall cease to be responsible for them."

Senator Smith declined to recede from his position and at that time. The committee then adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning. At a conference the decision to let all the men go except those under subpoena was reached.

The Titanic's rate of speed, which was approximately 26 1-2 land miles, was brought out yesterday from the lips of J. Bruce Ismay, president of the International Mercantile Marine, and managing director of the White Star Line, a witness before the U. S. Senate committee, which is investigating the disaster.

Nervous, but not in tears, as was Capt. Rostron of the Carpathia, who followed him on the stand, Mr. Ismay told in whispers of his escape from the sinking liner, from the time he pushed away in a boat with the women, until he found himself, clad in his pajamas, aboard the Carpathia. He was not sure in just what boat he left the Titanic, nor was he sure how long he remained on the liner after she struck.

He added, however, that before he entered a lifeboat, he had been told that there were no more women on the decks; he denied that there had been any censoring of messages from the Carpathia.

Other witnesses, including Captain Rostron, bore him out in this, with the explanation that the lone wireless operator on the rescue ship, swamped with personal messages, was unable to send matter for the press.

Second Officer Lightholder described how he filled his boat, and said that he had chosen woman passengers first. Lightholder testified 218 members of the crew were saved.

"If the same course was pursued on the starboard side as you pursued on the port, in filling boats, how do you account for so many members of the crew being saved?" asked Senator Smith.

"I have enquired especially and have found that for every six persons picked up, five were either firemen or stewards."

Lightholder declared that some lifeboats went back after the Titanic sank and picked up some.

Lightholder described how the ship went down. He told how the ship tilted as it was going down. The crow's nest was described as being level with the water when the bridge was entirely submerged."

"Was there any demonstration?" asked Senator Smith.

"No, sir."

"There must have been 1,500 people aboard and yet no lamentation?"

"I heard none; not a sound."

He, like Col. Gracie, went down with the ship and had a miraculous escape.

Mr. Ismay was the first witness called at the morning session.

Asked by Senator Smith to describe the trip of the Titanic, Ismay said that at no time was the ship run at full speed. He stated that she was capable of "80 revolutions" a minute, but that at no time had she exceeded 75. On the second day, he said, she logged 519 miles, and on the third day 546 miles.

Continuing his evidence, Mr. Ismay said:

"Captain Smith said to me: "We have struck ice.' I asked him whether he considered the situation serious, and he said that he did. I then saw the chief engineer and he also considered the situation serious."

Mr. Ismay then stated that he had sent no messages from the Carpathia.

"Were you on deck when the order was given to lower the boats?" he was asked.

He replied that he was, that Captain Smith had simply turned and given the order to lower the lifeboats. All the boats, he said, were on the sun deck. The women and children were put into them and they were lowered into the sea.

"I would like to express my sincere grief for this catastrophe," Mr. Ismay said. "As far as we are concerned we have nothing to conceal, and we court the fullest enquiry. The Titanic was built in Belfast—not by contract, but by commission—and she was the latest thing in ship construction.

"I helped to get a number of the boats out and assisted in getting the women into them," said Mr. Ismay.

"I left the ship—the last to leave so far as I know—in the starboard collapsible boat. I floated about all night. It was terrible."

Captain Rostron said he took the Carpathia to New York instead of Halifax because the survivors could more easily be taken care of at the former city.

Mr. Ismay was asked how long he remained on the crippled ship.

"That would be hard to estimate," he responded. "Almost until she sank. Probably an hour and a quarter." Then Senator Smith asked the circumstances under which he left the boat.

"The boat was being filled," began Mr. Ismay. "The officers called out to know if there were any more women to go. There were none. No passengers were on the deck. So as the boat was being lowered I got into it."

"The ship was sinking?" asked Senator Smith.

"The boat was sinking," almost whispered Mr. Ismay.

Senator Newlands asked about the lifeboats at great length.

"Take the Titanic," he said, "whose tonnage is three times that of the Carpathia, how many additional lifeboats could she accommodate without inconvenience?"

"I don't know the ship," said Captain Rostron, "but if she couldn't carry more than twenty she could be made to."

Captain Smith Chose Death.

New York, April 20.—At the American Seamen's Assoication, where 150 of the rescued crew of the Titanic are being fed, clothed and housed, G. A. Hogg, able seaman, told last night of the last of Captain Smith. Hogg says that as the Titanic sank a big wave washed him over the side, and he landed on a raft carrying 35 persons.

"The next moment I saw Captain Smith in the water alongside the raft. 'There's the skipper,' I yelled. 'Give him a hand,' and they did; but he shook himself free and shouted to us, 'Good-bye, boys, I'm going to follow the ship.' That was the last we saw of our skipper."

Chilean Steamer Sinks.

San Francisco, April 20.—Eighty lives were lost on the night of March 21 when the Chilean steamer Cachapoal sank with all on board. The British steamer Queen Helena brought the news.

The Cachapoal carried thirty passengers, and was manned by British officers and a crew of Chileans. Officers of the Queen Helena said the generally accepted theory was that the Cachapoal sank after her boilers exploded, as the boilers had given trouble frequently.

Relief ships were unable to find a trace of the missing steamer after she failed to appear at Payta, Peru, on her regular run, March 22.

POLICY OF MR. ROWELL

What He Would do to the School System.

Toronto, April 20.—Pointing out the inadequacy of the policy promulgated by Sir James Whitney to solve the problem of the English-French schools in Ontario and bring these schools to a state of efficiency, Mr. N. W. Rowell made several recommendations before a meeting of Ward Six Liberals last night.

The conditions shown to exist in these schools by Dr. Merchant's report, said Mr. Rowell, indcated a complete breakdown in the administration of the Department of Education. No more severe condemnation could be passed upon the Department than the facts shown in this report.

The dismissal of the officials directly responsible for the present unsatisfactory conditions in the English-French schools.

The establishment of additional training schools to secure supply of English-speaking teachers, and the providing by the Government of financial aid to secure this result.

The carrying out of the present law with regard to the language of instruction to be used in schools.

The replacing of inefficient or unsympathetic inspectors by others who will adopt sympathetic attitude towards the teuchers and pupils in the English-French schools.

The appointment of supervising inspectors with larger experience to see that the school laws and regulations are carried out, and to help secure the sympathetic co-operation of teachers and pupils in the policy of the Department of Education.

Financial assistance to be given by the Government to schools in sparsely settled districts to enable them to obtain well-qualified teachers.

The discontinuation of all denominational teaching and of the use of unauthorized text-books in public schools.

HAS NO FEAR OF FORGERY CHARGE

Toronto, April 20.—Counsel for Dr Beattie Nesbitt yesterday appeared before the commissioner of extradition at Chicago and waived extradition on behalf of the doctor on the forgery charge, which is to date the only one registered there against him. It was announced the night of the doctor's arrest, that he would waive extradition. Provincial Detective Greer is now in Chicago to lay four additional charges of fraud against the doctor. H. H. Dewart K.C., of counsel for the doctor, has not yet positively decided what action he will take should the doctor be discharged and arrested upon the new charges.

Engineers Ready to Strike.

New York, April 20.—Warren S. Stone grand chief of the brotherhood of locomotive engineers, notified the Association of Railway General Managers yesterday, that the engineers would wait here until eight o'clock for a reply from the railroads to their demand for increased pay. If no reply was forthcoming by that hour then a walkout of the engineers of 50 eastern railroads could be expected at any time.

Mr. Stuart sent a letter yesterday afternoon to Mr. Stone saying that if further action by the brotherhood were suspended for a few days the conference committee of the general managers association would be reconvened.

LEGISLATURE TO BE GIVEN THOROUGH OVERHAULING

Bad Acoustic Properties Are To Be Remedied by a General Alteration of the Walls, Aisles, Galleries and Seating Arrangements — Complete Fireproofing Has to Be Installed Anyway.

Toronto, April 20.—A complete remodeling of the Legislative Assembly room at the Parliament Buildings is under consideration. For a long time it has been recognized that the acoustics of the chamber are none too good, the members of the House and Press Gallery alike, testifying to the difficulty in hearing remarks of speakers whose oratorical powers are not extremely well developed. Sir James Whitney, Hon. W. J. Hanna and Hon. A. G. MacKay and a few others in the House are clearly audible, no matter whether they pitch their voices in high or two tones, but the majority of the members are not very easy to hear on many occasions. The Prime Minister is of the opinion that the legislative chamber, as it is at present, is too large and roomy. There is a lot of wasted space on the floor of the House and the visitors' galleries on each side are also constructed in such a way that while enhancing the appearance of the chamber, they do not improve the capacity for the proper distribution of sound. It is believed that the seats on the floor of the House will also be rearranged, the three rows on each side being brought closer together. The main aisle in front of the Speaker's dais is also regarded as too wide for practical purposes. The dimensions of the chamber itself may also be considerably reduced.

In view of the fact that the entire buildings are to be made fireproof, now that the burnt west wing has been reconstructed, and the new north wing almost completed, the Government is considering the advisability of immediately commencing the remodeling of the legislative chamber, as soon as the building operations at present underway are finished.

They Want Immigrants.

Montreal, April 20.—A large delegation representing the Associated Boards of Trade of the Eastern Townships, yesterday interview Hon. Robert Rogers, asking that the Federal Government take steps to direct a stream of British immigration into this district. The delegation represented that manufacturers, farmers and even housekeepers were suffering from inability to get labor to develop the country.

They asked that a regular immigration station be established at Sherbrooke where immigrants could be properly cared for on arrival.

Senator Rufus Pope presented the delegation. Hon. Robt. Rogers promised aid, and his Department will give the matter its serious consideration.

Lifebelts as Souvenirs.

New York, April 20.—The Titanic's crew has been transferred aboard the Red Star Liner Lapland, where they will stay until wanted for the official enquiry. They were forbidden to give out interviews.

The crew of the Carpathia busied themselves yesterday cutting up Titanic life-preservers that were brought aboard by survivors. The pieces will be sold as souvenirs.

Advertise in The Review, It pays.

Another Montreal Man Lost.

Montreal, April 20.—To the list of Montrealers who lost their lives in the Titanic disaster must be added Albert Mallet, a commercial traveler in the employ of Laporte, Martin & Compagnie. Mr. Mallet, with his wife and little son, embarked in the second cabin at Cherbourg and their names had, therefore, not appeared in the first list of passengers wired from England. Mrs. Mallet and child were saved.

Mr. Mallet was about 45 years of age and had been in Canada some ten years, and with the firm of Laporte, Martin & Co. for about eight years.

MET DEATH ON TRACKS

Unknown Man Killed by Train on G.T.R,

Toronto, April 20.—With his right arm and right leg almost severed from his body, an unknown man was found dead yesterday morning about 6.30 on the G.T.R. tracks opposite Indian road by Albert Gilman and W. McLean of Humber Bay.

The man had apparently been run over by a train and his body dragged a considerable distance, as blood tracks were seen for several yards on the railway tracks.

The police of No. 6 were notified and had the body removed to the city morgue, where it awaits identification.

The dead man was about 50 years of age, had brown hair and moustache turning grey, was dressed in a blue coat with white stripes and without lining, brown tweed pants black boots with rubber heels, green tie, bought at Charles Symons' store in Belleville, and had a button of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen in his coat.

He had no teeth in his upper jaw and a gold-filled hunting case watch was found in his pockets. There were no papers whatever to identify him by and apparently he had been kiled Thursday night.

Deceased had the first finger of his right hand taken right off, the second finger of the same hand taken off at the first joint and the second finger of the left hand taken off completely. These are old injuries and may lead to his identification.

Union May Come Soon,

Toronto, April 20.—Reporting on the progress of the church union movement at the meeting of the Congregational Church Association yesterday afternoon, Rev. J. W. Pedley observed: "It is almost inconceivable that the Church Union movement which started in the Presbyterian Church, should now be blocked by that church." Mr. Pedley regretted that he could not give a brighter report, but expressed the opinion that union would come within a few years. A hopeful sign was that the older men were almost all strongly for union, also the church officers and the leaders generally in the Presbyterian Church, and the education and literature departments of the churches were to join their forces as far as possible, and the colleges of the three denominations in Montreal would probably federate.

GRIEF STRICKEN LONDON HOLDS GREAT MEMORIAL

He Was a Soldier.

Ottawa, April 20.—His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught received yesterday the following reply to his message of condolence, addressed to the President of the United tSates:

"I thank you sincerely for your message of sympathy with our country in the great loss it has sustained through the terrible disaster. I also appreciate very deeply the tribute you pay to Major Butt. When I read that only part of the ship's company was rescued I knew he went down with the ship. He was a soldier. (Signed W. H. Taft."

JAIL TERM SAVED HIM

McDonald Was Doing Time When Shooting Occurred.

Toronto, April 20.—The fact that he spent nineteen days in the Don Jail got Donald McDonald out of a nasty scrape yesterday morning, when an effort was made to extradite him by the Buffalo police on a charge of shooting Abe Paniamo, a Buffalo pawnbroker, with intent to kill, on Sept. 27. The case was heard by Judge Winchester, the local extradition judge.

Three Buffalo citizens identified McDonald as the man who did the shooting, although Paniamo was not quite so sure. One of the citizens was quite positive, he said that McDonald was the man.

It was shown, however, that on Sept. 27, the day the shooting took place, McDonald was tried before Judge Winchester in the Sessions on a charge of fraud. He had registered at the Gladstone Hotel, while under the influence of liquor, and left without paying his bill. He was let out on suspended sentence, however, as he had made restitution, and had been in jail nineteen days.

When this evidence was proved by court and police officials, Detective Sergeant J. S. Ryan, of Buffalo, said he was quite satisfied that McDonald was not the man he wanted, but said that his double must exist somewhere.

After lecturing McDonald on the evils of drinking, the judge allowed him to go.

Saved Others, Not Himself.

Montreal, April 20.—Mr. Moxime Mireault, chief inspector of the Royal Edward Institute, and one of the heads of the anti-tuberculosis movement in Montreal, passed away at his residence, 488 Huntley street, a victim to the disease he so faithfully fought.

The deceased's chosen profession was chemistry. He graduated from Laval Chemistry Faculty and after practicing a few years, he became interested with those who formed the Anti-Tuberculosis League. Later on, he was made the chief inspector of the Royal Edward Institute.

Mr. Mireault was born in Montreal in 1870. He leaves a wife and three small children.

Ten Thousand Persons Assemble In Cathedral In Memory of the Victims of the Disaster—Heroism of British Sailors Is the One Bright Spot In the Gloom—Designer of Titanic Faints.

New York, April 20.—The World has received the following from London:

The tragic story of the Titanic holds the British public in its terrible grip as none has ever done before. The only relief from the all-pervading gloom is the glory in the magnificent heroism that emerges from the ghastly horrors of that last scene.

St. Paul's Cathedral was thronged yesterday by a congregation of 10,000 at the memorial service for victims of the disaster. The scene when the vast throng, overcome by the sadness and solemnity of the occasion, joined tearfully and with intense feeling in singing the final hymn, was one to be remembered. The most sensational incident of the service was the fainting of Mr. Carlisle, designer of the Titanic. He collapsed in his seat and had to be removed by an ambulance corps. Ever since the catastrophe, Mr. Carlisle has been in an overwrought condition and has not slept.

Mourning was more general in London Thursday and Friday than at any time since the death of King Edward. Another indication of the extent to which the calamity has taken hold of the public mind and heart, is the sudden drop in attendance at the theatres and other places of amusement. Even the houses which have been doing a big business have been half empty for the last three nights. Subscriptions are being made liberally to the relief funds, and whatever money can do to alleviate the suffering caused by the disaster, will be forthcoming.

Public interest in every detail of the wreck continues to be insatiable. The newspapers contain almost nothing else and the demand for them is unprecedented.

The opinion is becoming stronger and more general here that reckless navigating for the purpose of making a record and overconfidence in the overwhelming immensity of the ship, were responsible for the catastrophe.

The report that the Titanic was proceeding almost at full speed in the ice field, although she had been fully warned of her peril, seems to indicate a negligent or indifferent condition of mind incredible under circumstances of such tremendous responsibility.

First Result of Disaster.

London, April 20.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—All Allan Line steamers that are sailing to Canada this week carry extra lifeboats sufficient, in fact, to accommodate every soul on board. The management of the C.P.R. liners state that all their ships are to be equipped immediately with such life-saving appliances as will accommodate passengers and crew in case of emergency. It is also probable that the Cunard and Booth Lines will follow suit.

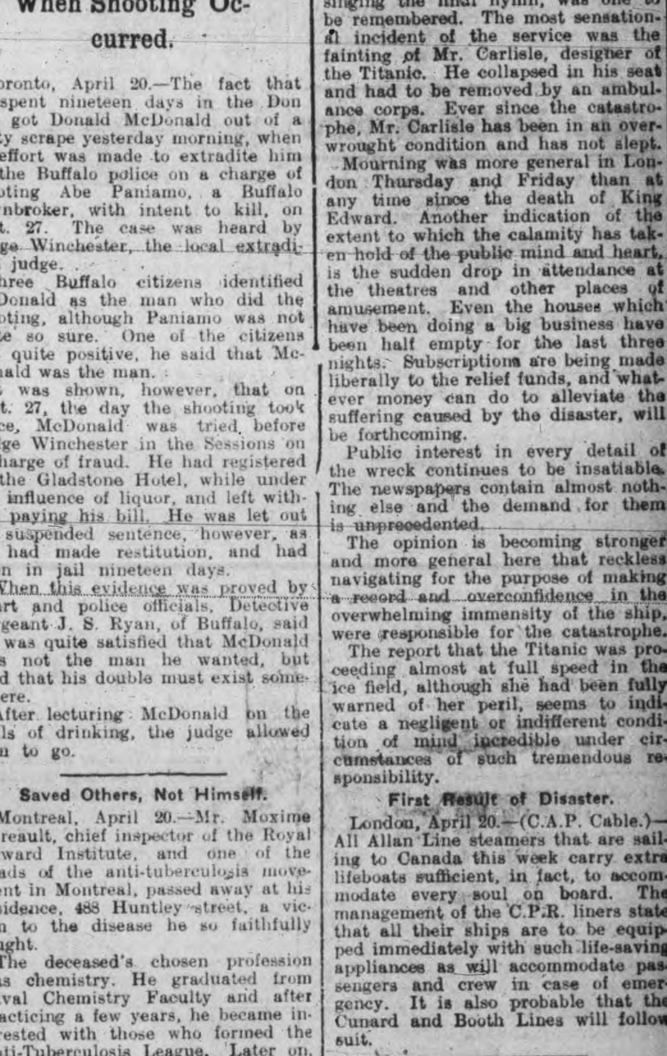
WOMAN ACCUSED BY BANKER: DAUGHTER DEFENDS HER



Social ostracism, not insanity, caused Mrs. Mary E. Gage to threaten to horsewhip or kill Charles J. Bell, president of the American Security Company, according to the testimony in her behalf in lunacy proceedings now going on in Washington. Miss Margaret C. Gage, her daughter, attributed to Mr. Bell the failure of her mother and herself to scale the Washington social ladder, the cool reception they received at a fashionable church and their difficulties in real estate transactions. Mr. Bell testified that he never was hostile—only fearful when he received Mrs. Gage's threatening letters.

After Mrs. Gage was arrested on a warrant charging that she had threatened Mr. Bell's life, the police surgeons declared her of unsound mind and she was sent to the Government Hospital for the Insane. Society is well represented at the hearings daily.

LUNG TROUBLE

Mrs. Biny Brown, of Tenecape, N.S., Was Cured by Catarrhozone of Lung Trouble and Catarrh, After Hundreds of Other Remedies Failed

If your lungs are weak; if there is consumption in your family; if Colds, Catarrh, and Bronchitis bother you, be sure to use Catarrhozone It is especially adapted for these diseases and cures every time

Mrs. Brown took cough mixtures, but they made her sick. Then she used an atomizer, but, after resorting without benefit to poultices, she tried Catarrhozone.

"I used Catarrhozone Inhaler," writes Mrs. Brown, "five minutes every hour, and soon recognized that it was going to cure me. I could feel the soothing medicated air spreading through the air passages of the throat, and it touched the sore spots in the lungs that other remedies failed to reach. Catarrhozone seemed to go just where it was needed most, and soon put a stop to my cough. It restored me to perfect health, and I am convinced that no cough, cold, or catarrh can exist if Catarrhozone is used."

No treatment is so clean, so pleasant, so certain to cure as Catarrhozone. By means of the Inhaler, the local symptoms, such as coughing, inflammation and congestion are speedily corrected. Ferrozone tablets, which are taken after each meal purify and cleanse the blood of all poisons, and build up and strengthen the system.

This local and constitutional treatment is always effective, and cures cases that have been given up as hopeless. Money can't buy or produce anything better, and to get cured it is absolutely necessary to use Catarrhozone.

THE WEST AND PROSPERITY

The growth and the prosperity of the west are making growth and prosperity for Eastern Canada. There is no doubt whatever now that the best interests of East and West are tied up together, that what hurts one will hurt the other, and affect all Canada. New Brunswick is the latest province to feel the effect of the good times that Canada is now enjoying. The era of awakening will spread eastward from New Brunswick to Nova Scotia and then every province—with the possible exception of Quebec—will feel the quickening of life that comes with pulsating prosperity and progress.

The west is going ahead this year as it has never gone before. Notwithstanding all the talk about the hardships caused by the shortage of cars, about the loss caused by the grain rotting in the fields, and the lack of the United States market, the West is forging ahead at an unparalleled pace. There is nothing in sight to stay the progress of the country. Let everything be done which will preserve to Canada the good times. With abundant harvests from our fertile lands, there is no reason why Canada should not be sufficient unto herself, in the matter of prosperity and progress. The influence of American depressions is less likely to be felt in Canada than ever, with the defeat of reciprocity. The Borden government is pledged to keep Canada for the Canadians and such as come here to be Canadians. That such a policy will build up Canada as it has never been built up, the experience of 1912 seems fair to show. The changes in the tariff that will be made through the tariff commision when it is appointed will probably not be such as to make any material change in the financial status of the country. The prime effort of the Borden government will be to preserve general prosperity, good times for all classes of people, and the free trade nostrums and the revolutionary theorists will not have a look in.

SAFETY ON OCEAN TRAVEL

Rightly enough, the fate of the "Titanic" occupies more space in the newspapers than matters of public import. It will be a feature of the press for a week, and then public interest will wane. While it is a terrible price to pay if the betterment of the safety of the ocean traveller become greater and surer that much will have been accomplished.

Already the British authorities are at work. The public investigations both in America and England, will get to the bottom of the disaster. If it is determined that the vessel was being pushed to make a record on her maiden trip, then the blame will fall on the owners of the line that inspired the idea of speed, under the circumstances, and drastic legislation may follow, to be held up as a preventative in future.

The accepted idea that such a vessel was invulnerable has received a shock, while it contained the very latest improvements as well as the latest fads for the diversion of passengers. If there were room for these fancies, then there should be room for life-boats and safety appliances. These were only present in number, not half sufficient. It is the irony of fate that the last word in marine construction should have been sent out to fail in one most critical place.

It has needed some such disaster as this to prompt public opinion to insist on action, and in the case of the English authorities it will be swift and effective. The Briton moves slowly, but once moving he is thorough. No matter the expense, the provision must and will be made. Definite lines will be laid down in marine construction for passenger service that will provide ample safety, so far as boats and such matters are concerned, for those who go down to sea in ships.

Committed For Trial.

Toronto, April 20.—Edward Elmer McIntosh was committed for trial yesterday on a charge of having stolen 4,000 half-signed $5 Traders' Bank notes from the Dominion Express Co. in March, 1909. He appeared in the police court, pleaded not guilty and was committed for trial.

The missing money was being forwarded from Ottawa to Toronto by C.P.R. in a special locked car. McIntosh was a brakeman on the train

COLD CAUSED SERIOUS TROUBLE

But Dodd's Kidney Pills Brought the Cure

Mr. Hugh Martin, Suffering From Kidney Disease for Two Years, Tells How He got Back His Health.

L'Achigan, Terrebonne Co., Que., April 19.—Special.—Again the people of this neighborhood are talking of a complete cure of kidney disease. Mr Hugh Martin, Jr., a well known young farmer, is the person cured, and he gives all the credit to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"My trouble was caused by a cold," Mr. Martin says, in an interview, "and I suffered for two years. My head would ache and I had pains in the back as well. I felt heavy and sleepy after meals. I was often dizzy, my memory was failing and I found it difficult to collect my thoughts. I was also nervous while heart flutterings added to my anxiety.

"I was a sick man indeed when I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills, but by the time I had taken two boxes I was a changed man. Are you surprised that I think Dodd's Kidney Pills a wonderful remedy?"

If you have two or more of Mr. Martin's symptoms your kidneys are diseased. Dodd's Kidney Pills are the sure cure.

Province Seeks Loan.

Toronto, April 20.—Public subscriptions for the raising of a $2,000,000 loan on provincial bonds are being advertised for by the Government. These bonds will be made payable to the bearer, and on request of holders will be exchanged for "Ontario Government stock" at any time. The loan is generally raised annually, and is for the purpose of meeting the expenditures on Hydro-Electric extensions and various other public improvements.

A further loan of $210,000 is being advertised for on similar terms to the $2,000,000 loan. The smaller amount is to enable the Government to purchase certain territory at or adjoining the Algonquin National Park, which is wanted for purposes of reforestation.

Deathly Cramps, Stomach was Bloated

A Bad Case That Proves Cramps and Stomach Disorders are Cured Fast by Nerviline.

"The distress I suffered from cramps last summer was so severe I thought it meant death," writes P. R. Emerson, of Guys Hill, P. O. "I was doubled up with pain and in such bad shape I couldn't walk a hundred feet. I remembered having Nerviline on hand and took half a teaspoonful in sweetened water. In five minutes I was well and my stomach derangements disappeared entirely."

NERVILINE AN INSTANT RELIEF

For cramps, flatulence, diarrhoea and disorders of the stomach and bowels, Nerviline knows no equal—one million bottles used every year—fifty years on the market, that's proof enough of its merit. Large bottles, 50c.; trial size, 25c. All dealers or The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

MONTREAL, April 18.—Business over the cable in Manitoba spring wheat continues very quiet, owing to the fact that the bulk of the bids coming forward are away out of line. A weak feeling prevails in the butter market and prices have declined 2c to 3c per lb., owing to the increased supplies. Cheese is ¼c per lb. lower and eggs rule steady.

THE SALOON AND ITS ALLIES.

Christian men who rent property for saloon purposes are allies of the saloon, and enemies, accordingly, of the owners of all adjacent properties. These men often excuse themselves for what they are doing by the argument that they can get proper rent for their property by renting it for saloon purposes. But they are not entitled to such rent. What right have they as Christian men to do wrong for money's sake? Their saloons depreciate the value of other properties in the neighborhood, and they make possible all the work of ruin and devastation and improvement which the saloon carries on.

The saloon and crime and sin are great allies. As much evil is planned in saloons as in any other one place. The saloon is the haven of the idler, the peace-breaker, the violator of the law, the men who prey upon their fellows. Those who wish to debauch others find it the best place for their purpose. Saloons are of all social grades, just as sin is, but no place is more congenial to the sin of any particular social level than the saloon of that same level. Is it not marvelous that society actually allows the maintenance of places which are the natural gathering and distributing places for evil and vice and crime?

The patrons of saloons are, of course, their allies. Without them the saloons could not exist. It is the money of their customers which supports them. Whoever spends anything in a saloon helps to perpetuate it, and makes himself confederate with all that the saloon does and with all its other allies.

The saloons have many hidden allies. The brewers who establish or support them in order to have a market for their beers, the politicians who finance them or back them with other kinds of help, the licensing authorities who multiply them, as well as the property owners who lease building to them, are the allies of the saloon. The parents who send children to the saloon for drink and the men who treat their friends in them are allies.

The saloon is not a social necessity. It is a drinking-place. Men go to it not for fellowship, but for liquor. The money spent on saloons would make the homes of those who patronize the saloons infinitely more attractive and wholesome social centres than the saloons are or can ever be.

Those of us who treat the saloon as a joke, who regard it with all its baleful effects as necessary and unavoidable, who call it the "poor man's club," and deem ourselves large-minded in allowing it to him, forgetting the curse it is to his family and the economic waste it is to the nation, who vote to continue the institution when we have an opportunity to pass upon it at the polls, who do not work and pray to purge our life of one of its chief sources of pollution,—we are all, are we not, so far allies of the saloon?

THRILLING STORY OF GIRL RESCUED

sooner you put your threat into execution the better I shall like it.'

"'Very well, my lady,' he replied; 'I will send you away. You are ungrateful for all that has been done for you, so I'll put an end to it.'

"For the next few days Mr. Babbington and my uncle kept away from me, and were closeted together most of the time. Once, when I had been downstairs to get a book, I overheard them talking. One sentence puzzled me greatly. I heard the old man say, evidently in reply to something my uncle had said:—

"'Never mind, Grimshaw; I'd just as soon have the money as the girl—it would be less trouble.'

"The day before yesterday Uncle Peter said to me:

"'To-morrow night I am going to take you away to a school. I shall shut up the house, so you can stay on at the school when vacation comes.'

"No more was said until my uncle came to me about five o'clock yesterday afternoon, and told me to be ready in an hour, as we had a long journey before us.

"'Why do you start so late?' I asked. Would it not be better to wait until morning?'

"'No,' he replied, snappishly; 'I have no time to waste. I must get through with my business as soon as I can. I can't take your trunk in the buggy, but I'll send it in the wagon as soon as I get back. You can do without it for a day or two, I think.'

"To this I made no reply, for just then we were called to supper. For the first time for weeks I did not have to face John Babbington at the supper-table. It was a silent meal, neither uncle nor myself being inclined to converse. At the end of the meal we left the house and entered the light buggy that stood at the gate. The horse attached to the vehicle was a strange one, and I remarked upon the circumstance to my companion, who replied—

"'Yes, it is a strange horse, for mine was lame, so I got this old nag from the livery-stable. I guess he'll carry us where we want to go.'

"I do not remember much after that. I think something must have been put in my tea that sent me to sleep. The next thing I recollect is feeling earth strike my face as I lay in a hole, and I heard the voices of Uncle Peter and John Babbington. I screamed and struggled and one of them struck me a blow on the side of the head, which is all I can recall until I wakened in his room."

"The brutes!" exclaimed Dr. Green carried away by his rage. "At all costs we must hunt them out and punish them as they deserve!"

"You will not mind staying here to day?" asked Mr. Fisher, a few minutes later, coming to the door of the room equipped for a journey.

"Dr. Green and Mr. Howard will stay here with you while we go to the town an see if we can find the two wretches who so nearly took your life. They will feel so sure of having put you safely out of the way that we may find them still in town."

Reaching Peterborough, Mr. Fisher and his friends went at once to the judge's office, where, as briefly as possible, the case was stated, a warrant made out for the arrest of the two men, and the proper officer sent to serve it.

No once had seen Babbington since some time the previous day. Mr. Grimshaw had entered his home about ten o'clock in the morning, his housekeeper stated, and had some papers from his desk; he had then gone to his room, and after placing a few articles of clothing in a valise came downstairs and left the house. Before he did so he told the woman that she could shut up the house and go home for a week, as he was going on a business trip, and would not be back for a number of days.

The rascals, it appeared, had seven hours' start of their pursuers. It was supposed that old Babbington waited somewthere while Peter Grimshaw went to the house for his papers, as his horse, a fast one, was gone from the stable. Once together it was surmised that they made a bee-line for Uncle Sam's country.

Late that night the pursuing party returned to the camp and reported their unsuccessful attempt to find the would-be murderers.

Next morning Miss Masters was told that the men had decamped, and was asked if she wished to go back to her old home.

"No: of, no!" she exclaimed, in terrified accents. I don't want to go back. I should be afraid they might return and kill me. Don't take me there!"

"Then I will take you to my home," said Tom Fisher, "Mrs. Fisher will look after you as if she were your own mother."

They broke camp that morning, and returned to their homes. The poor girl, weak and shaken from the rough usage she had received, was placed on a pile of skins and blankets in the wagon, and was safely delivered into the hands of Mrs. Fisher, who gave her every care.

Efforts were made as soon as possible, to find out how much, if any, of the girl's fortune was left. It was discovered that Peter Grimshaw, had for some time been converting property into money, until all that was left were the house in town, and a large farm. There was also a small sum of money in the bank in Florence's name, placed there by her mother years before.

'About two weeks after we returned to town, a message came one day to Mr. Fisher saying that a man who had been badly hurt was dying in a little village about 20 miles away, and wished to see him. As quickly as horses could be harnessed, Tom Fisher—who was always ready to help a fellow creature—was off. On his return the next day he told a strange story.

When he reached the little farmhouse a man met him at the door and asked him if he was Mr. Fisher. Answering in the affirmative, he was immediately shown into a small bedroom, where, lying on a bed, he beheld the emaciated form of Peter Grimshaw.

When the old man saw his visitor he said, in a feeble voice—

"I knew you'd come Tom, if I sent for you, and I couldn't die without telling someone."

"Telling what, Peter? But how did you come here, and in this shape?"

"It is a just retribution for my sins, Tom! But I must be quick, and tell you all while my strength holds out."

With that he told Tom the story of the night when he and his partner in crime had buried the poor girl alive in the woods. He also confess- to the compact between himself and John Babbington, which was to the effect that if the latter helped him to get rid of Florence Masters he should have an equal share of the property.

"Where is Babbington?" asked Tom Fisher, when the old man had finished his narrative.

"Dead! That brute of a horse of his took it into his head to run away going down that steep hill leading into the village, and collided with the rocks just at the bottom of the hill. We were both thrown out, and Babbington was killed instantly, while I broke my back. I have only a little while to live now. Tom, I am haunted by the screams of Florence! Oh, if I could undo the past! I have got the money, but what use is it to me now? I am afraid to die!"

As soon as he could command the attention of the dying man—for Grimshaw's mind was wandering—Fisher told him that Florence was not dead, but had been rescued and was now alive and well.

"Tom, Tom! You are not deceiving me?" demanded Grimshaw, piteously, as he grasped Fisher's hand convulsively.

"No, Peter, I am not deceiving you I am telling you the truth. Florence was saved from the awful death you planned for her, and is now at my home."

"Thank God for His mercy to a poor sinner!" said Grimshaw, and then, with one long shuddering breadth, the old man was dead.

What became of the girl? Well, she was my beloved wife for thirty years, and the mother of my children. I was one of the hunters at the lodge in the woods, and assisted to extricate her from her midnight grave.

SHIP BROKE HER BACK

First Officer Wilde, Who Was in in Charge, Shot Himself

Quartermaster Moody of the Titanic said last night that First Officer Wilde of he Titanic, who was on the bridge when the vessel struck the berg, killed himself. He said that Wilde drew his revolver and shot himself as soon as he realized that the accident was serious.

"We were running fully 23 knots an hour," said Moody, "when we hit. We encountered a sudden haze, probably coming direct from the great iceberg, and we could hardly have been more than one or two lengths into it unttil we hit. We struck he 'growler' first, and the Titanic simply went over it and broks her back. There was no chance for the compartment doors to close."

Moody declared that on the day preceding the tragedy the Titanic had logged 565 miles.

ORPHAN BABES

Seven Had Been Hurled Overboard by Frantic Parents and Rescued

Seven babes, who may never be identified, and whose parents, or mothers at least, perished in the Titanic horror, were tenderly cared for in New York foundling asylums.

The babies were thrown to lifeboats by their parent. No one knows their names and their clothing gives no clue to their identity.

In addition to these seven infants are two other children, five and four years old—nameless so far as he other survivors know—both insane. One has the scarlet fever. The other is sugering from spinal meningitis. Probably neither will live.

In the frenzy of the departure from the sinking Titanic, nobobdy remembers what parents hurled their be loved babes to the water, hoping that they might be saved. Efforts to have survivors on the Carpathia identify them failed.

A FUNERAL SERVICE

On the Carpathia for the Husbands of Thirty Women

Dr. J. E. Kemp, a physician told of a funeral service held aboard the Carpathia for the dead of the Titanic, for husbands of thirty women. All o: these were under the age of 23, and had been made widows by the disaster. Most of the women were brides he declared.

Kemp said although their husbands were missing, few of them realized that the services were being held for their dead husbands, as the women thought they had been rescued.

That the crew of the Carpathia picked up the bodies of three men and one baby, and that three of the persons rescued from the Titanic died later from exposure and were buried at sea, was also stated by Kemp.

LADY DUFF GORDON

passenger of the Titanic who with her husband were rescued

Died Like Heroes

"Major Butt escorted me to a seat in the boat," said Miss Marie Young. "He helped me find a seat, arranged my clothing about me, stood erect, doffed his hat, smiled, and said 'Good-by,' and then he stepped back to the deck, already awash. As we were rowed away I looked back, and the last I saw of him, he was smiling and waving his hat to me."

To Death Bravely

Dr. Washington Dodge, of San Francisco, thinks he saw the last of Major Butt. Silhouetted against the sky, he saw Butt and Colonel Astor, heads erect, their arms apparently around each other's shoulders, standing on the bridge of the Titanic, as the stricken leviathan lurched into the cold, black water.

No accident policy can help a man when he falls in love.

SOME SNEAKED INTO BOATS

Wife of a Noted Novelist Says There Were a Few Male Cowards

Mrs. Jacques Futrelle, who was rescued, but whose husband, the noted novelist went down with the Titanic, declared that the men who were saved, except those required to man the boats, sneaked into the lifeboats.

"I state this," she declared emphatically, "and I mean it".

Mrs. Futrelle joined with all the other survivors in according praise to the heroism of these men, who died that the women and children might live. "Their conduct was magnificent, as fine as anything in the annals of fact or fiction."

"I was just going to bed when the crash came. Jack was up in the smoking saloon. The shock threw me down and I was struggling to my feet when Jack rushed in and cried: "Get dressed at once, the boat is going down," we found everything in confusion on the deck. Women were screaming and rushing frantically about calling for their husbands and children. The officers were roaring orders and above all boomed the tremendous bass of the Titanic's foghorn, the behavior of the men, or most of them when they were told to stand aside and give the women and children first places in the lifeboats was magnificent. A few cowards tried to rush ahead but they were quickly thrown back."

"I was placed in one of the last lifeboats to leave. Jack, poor boy, was very brave, when the time came to say Good-Bye, with a final kiss he half lifted me into the boat, saying "Hurry up May, you are keeping the others waiting," only three in my boat were first cabin passengers. The others were women from the steerage. We had been in the boat but a few minutes when the Titanic made her final plunge. I thought I saw Jack waving to me as he went down."

SPRING BLOOD IS WATERY BLOOD

How to Get New Health and New Strength at This Season

Spring ailments are not imaginary. Even the most robust find the winter months most trying to their health. Confinement indoors, often in overheated and nearly always badly ventilated rooms — in the home, the office, the shop and the school, taxes the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes thin and watery and is clogged with impurities. Some people have headaches and a feeling of langour. Others are low-spirited and nervous. Still others are troubled with disfiguring pimples and skin eruptions, while some get up in the morning feeling just as tired as when they went to bed. These are all spring symptoms that the blood is out of order and that a medicine is needed. Many people take purgative medicines in the spring. This is a serious mistake. You cannot cure yourself with a medicine that gallops through your system and leaves you weaker still. This is all that a purgative does. What you need to give you health and strength in the spring is a tonic medicine that will enrich the blood and soothe the jangled nerves. And the one always reliable tonic and blood builder is Dr. Wililams' Pink Pills. These pills not only banish spring weakness but guard you against the more serious ailments that follow, such as anaemia, nervous debility, indigestion, rheumatism, and other diseases due to bad blood. In proof of this Mrs. Emma Duck, Carleton Place, Ont., says: "I was greatly troubled with weak spells, dizziness and extreme nervousness, and did not find anything to help me until acting on the advice of an aunt I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After using five boxes I found my health fully restored, and cheerfully recommend the pills to others."

If you are ailing this spring you cannot afford, in your own interests to overlook so valuable a medicine as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

OF COURSE THE PETERBORO GIRLS WOULD "KICK"

Port Arthur News—One dollar each is the market quotation for kisses from pretty Fort William girls in Port Arthur to-day.

The price was established at about 10 a.m. for a delivery of "the goods' made at the corner of Arthur and Cumberland streets, the purveyor being one of the handsome maids who are busy to-day selling tags for the McKellar hospital of the sister city.

Clad in a neat little grey tailored suit and black hat, wearing her most fetching smile and looking just too pretty for anything, the young lady of his incident turned her face up to a citizen and asked him to buy a tag.

"I don't care much about the tag, but I will give you a dollar for a kiss," said the man.

"All right," said the girl, and quick as a flash the man stooped and drew his head close to the lass. She was as good as her word, and neither sidestepped nor wavered in the slightest.

"Smach" went two pair of lips.

As the dollar went into the girl's receptable, she turned and said, It was a little cigaretty, but it was worth it," and departed, looking for more worlds to conquer.

The man smiled, the girl smiled and everybody in the vicinity smiled, while various other men were noticed making motions that looked very much like search for a dollar.

"UMBRELLA JIM" KILLED BY TRAIN; ASLEEP ON TRACK

Bowmanville Statesman:—Old "Umbrella Jim" was killed on the G.T.R. track just east of Bowmanville station some time Tuesday night. He has been a regular visitor to frontier towns for years, but no one seems to know his name or from where he hailed. He was fond of drink, and it is supposed he was lying on the track asleep when killed. His remains were taken to L. Morris & Son's undertaking rooms, where Dr. A. S. Tilley, coroner, held an inquest, but it adjourned to next Tuesday without a verdict. The remains were sent to Queen's University, Kingston."

"Umbrella Jim" was known to many Peterborough people, and also the police. He visited this city and section on many occasions.

Important Advice To SPECTACLE WEARERS

Three Plain Facts

1 That more eyes are injured by the injurious use of Glasses than by any other known cause.

2 That a great number of people are wearing spectacles unsuitable for them, and for which their eyes have not been tested.

3 That the old fashioned and unscientific method of testing the eyes by trying on various spectacles of different strengths until the sight is apparently suited, is to say the least of it, dangerous.

It cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of those who suffer from defective eye-sight that proper lenses and correctly fitting frames are absolutely essential for comfortable spectacle wearing. We grind our own lenses.

CONCERT AT CONSERVATORY

Redferne Hollinshead, the noted tenor soloist, enjoys the distinction of a continental reputation, which in the estimation of the large and delighted audience who heard him at the Conservatory of Music, last evening, is fully justified. This brilliant artist's work was a wonderful demonstration of sweet, sympathetic vocalism, revealing a high tenor voice of wide range and extraordinary volume. What impresses one most while listening to his singing, is its peculiar velvety softness, which even at its strongest moments is never a moment minus its striking musical sweetness.

His reception last evening was one of the warmest and most flattering ever accorded a visiting artist. His stage presence and personality are important factors of his success, assisting in the effect of his singing to a remarkable degree. Mr. Hollinshead is a physically large man, and singing appears second nature with him. In the aria "On Away, Awake Beloved," from Hiawatha's Wedding feast, his work was a revelation to the audience. There are many passages of this little selection which call for operatic interpretation, and great vocal control. As an encore number, Mr. Hollinshead rendered by special request "God's Garden," in a manner that could scarcely be excelled, the silence which reigned speaking volumes for its effect.

Two simpler themes, "Macushla" and "For You Alone," were also faultlessly treated, winning most appreciative plaudits. But in the opinion of the audience, Mr. Hollinshead's triumph would have been incomplete had he failed to render the immortal passage from "Il Trovatore, "Ahj che le Morte Ognora," by Verdi. This was undoubtedly his sweetest and most effective number, his powers of tonal sustenance, sweetness and clarity being almost marvellous.

In response to determined encores he reappeared and rendered Kingsley's "Be Good My Child" in a most melodious manner, creating an unmistakably profound impression.

Capably assisting in the meritorious program were Mr. Leo Smith, Cello soloist of Toronto and the Conservatory of Music Orchestra.

The former is an artist, with a perfect understanding of his instrument. He was given a very cordial reception, his work being repeatedly applauded, and encores forthcoming. The cello when played by Mr. Smith, becomes more than a mere stringed instrument, and under his manipulation emits melody of an unusually high and artistic order. Mr. Smith's handling of the instrument is distinguished by steadiness and confidence, and his bow work is perfect. In Becker's "Minuet" and "A Spanish Dance," by Popper, his facility was strikingly prominent. The beautiful strains of Schumann's "Adagio" ever popular, though old, were most feelingly brought out, winning some of the most delighted applause of the night.

The Conservatory Orchestra played last night in an even more than usual accomplished and pleasing manner. Selections were rendered from "William Tell," "The Chocolate Soldier," and "Rob Roy," while their opening number was a beautifully played overture on "Irish Airs," by Bendix. Every selection was so perfectly supplied that special mention would be difficult. Probably their two most acceptable members however, were "My Hero" from the musical play "The Chocolate Soldier," and a passage from "Rob Roy." The finale was a rousing number from William Tell, proving a most appropriate conclusion to a program of merit that would be difficult to eclipse.

The exceedingly difficult part of Miss Pearl McKee, of the Conservatory staff, as accompaniste for the evening was most capably filled by her, despite of many trying moments attendant upon the supplying of satisfactory accompaniments for artists whose pieces are almost always new.

SPRING FLOODS BRING ABOUT THE PASSING OF LONDON STREET BRIDGE

The spring floods have swollen the Otonabee river to such an extent that the old London street wooden bridge could not withstand the pressure of water and was forced from its position. To prevent the bridge from floating towards the concrete dam, cables, which were stretched from the old Dickson stable yard to it, were used. It is the intention of the Quaker Oats Company to tear this bridge down when the water has decreased. This will give the men a better opportunity to work on it.

ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY

All members are invited to attend Divine Service at St. John's Church on Sunday evening next, in conjunction with the members of the Sons of England Benefit Society, as a mark of respect to the victims of the "Titanic" disaster. A special service will be conducted by Rev. Canon Davidson.

It is earnestly hoped that all members of the society and other men in sympathy with the movement will endeavor to be present.

Procession will be formed at Sons of England Hall at 6:30 p.m.

MAJOR PEUCHEN TOOK HIS BRIDE FROM PETERBORO

It is of local interest that the wife of Major Peuchen, of Toronto, one of the few Canadian men to escape from the ill-fated Titanic, is a former Peterborough girl.

Mrs. Peuchen, formerly Miss Thompson, and her father who was engaged in the lumber business while living here some years ago, were both well known locally and many of the older citizens will remember them well.

Mrs. Peuchen, it will be remembered, was among the large number of friends of the Titanic passengers allowed a place on the wharf in New York when the Carpathia with the survivors of the wreck, docked. Mr. Geo. Thompson, ex-mayor of Orillia, is a brother of Mrs. Peuchen.

While the people of Peterborough sympathize greatly with the friends and relatives of the victims of the collision, yet they will be glad that fortune has so favored Mrs. Peuchen that her husband has been safely restored to her.

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

The public memorial service to be held Sunday evening in St. John's church at seven o'clock, has been fully arranged, and it is expected that it will be of a most solemn and impressive character. The service will be under the auspices of Lansdowne Lodge, No. 25, S.O.E., and St. George's Society, Peterborough. Other fraternal societies of the city are invited to send representatives. The members of the society will assemble at the S.O.E. Hall, at 6.30 p. m., and march to the church, headed by the 57th Regiment band, who have generously offered their services, with the permission of the officer commanding the 57th regiment.

The service will be of a special character in harmony with the occasion. The "The "Dead March" and some hymns will be played by the band.

MUTT AND JEFF

At the Grand Opera House on Thursday next, April 25th, Mr. Gus Hill will present, for the first time in this city, the mammoth production of "Mutt and Jeff," a dramatization of Bud Fisher's cartoons of the same name, which at the present time are provoking laughter all over the entire country. This play was constructed for laughing purposes and it is said to keep the audience in a constant uproar from the rise to the fall of the final curtain. It is one of the biggest productions sent on the road in a great many years, Mr. Hill having spent in the neighborhood of $75,000 in preparing the piece for presentation, and as a result its presentation here will be a revelation to the theatre-goers of this city.

There is an interesting story to the play, the piece being filled with comedy situations, songs and ensembles. The members of the cast have been particularly chosen, especially the characters of "Mutt and Jeff." In their selection Mr Hill toured the entire country, and as a result he believes he has characters for those parts that are well nigh perfection. The entire company numbers more than fifty people, at least a half dozen stars being included in the cast, and there is a large number of supernumeraries in the play.

The story of "Mutt and Jeff" is one of love and politics in a South American Republic intermingled with which is a touch of pathos and "slews" of laughter, and a tasty dressing of catchy music, not forgetting a large contingent of pretty girls.

DEATH OF MR. WILLIAM UDY AT BRIDGENORTH

The village of Bridgenorth has been called upon to mourn the passing of one of its most widely-known and estimable residents, in the person of Mr. William Udy, who died last evening at his home after a brief illness at an age well over the allotted three score and ten.

The deceased was a man whose exemplary life and numerous commendable attributes had won a circle of friends who will keenly feel his departure from earthly activities and friendships.

For the past forty five years, the late Mr. Udy had resided in Bridgenorth, the latter twenty years of his life being passed in retirement. He came to this country alone when a mere youth and worked for a time at Omemee, following the lumber occupation there, and later in Bridgenorth. His birthplace was Cornwall, England.

He was united in marriage in Omemee to Miss Mary A. Glass, who survives him, together with four sons and three daughters, namely: William and Norton of London, Ont., Dean, of French River, and Percy of Bridgenorth, and Mrs. Robinson residing in the West and Paulina and Lily at home.

The funeral will be held Monday afternoon at two o'clock to Little Lake cemetery, conducted by Rev. Mr. Ireland of Bridgenorth.

In religion, the late Mr. Udy, was a staunch Methodist and in politics a Conservative.

HIS BARN AND CONTENTS LOST BY LIGHTNING

Some of the farmers had considerable difficulty on the roads this morning while on their way to the city, as the departure of Jack Frost has left the road bed in such a condition that the horses and wagon wheels sink to a considerable depth.

The lightning storm of last Sunday was particularly severe in the northern part of the country, and one farmer, Mr. Edgar Harrison, of Silver Lake, lost a large barn together with the contents which included the farm machinery and implements. Two horses were killed by the lightning and three others severely burned. The cattle in the barn were saved.

SOMETHING NEW AT LENDRUM S

Mr. W. G. Lendrum, the Charlotte street photographer, has received some very pretty back-grounds from "Bobby" Burns, one of England's greatest painters. The back-grounds are designed with the very latest tapestry effect, giving all the beauty of detail of the old English paintings. They are all painted in natural colors. The exteriors are innature's colors as well as presenting the beauty and perspective of landscape. They are the very latest in the photographic art in Peterborough, there being no others in the city, nor anywhere west of Montreal. The backgrounds will be in use at Lendrum's studio from now on, and will add much to the artistic quality of photographs. They were painted specially for the Lendrum studio.

THRILLING STORY OF GIRL RESCUED FROM GRAVE; STRANGE TALE FROM EARLY DAYS IN PETERBORO'

One of the Principals Who Assisted in Rescue Was T. J. Fisher, Who Conducted Hotel Here — Beautiful Girl Was Victim of Plotters Who Wished to Secure Her Money—Both Met Death Through Runaway of Their Horse.

The Review reprints from the Wide World Magazine, an English publication, the story as following.

Some of our readers, and there are many of those who have taken the Daily Review since its initial publication, and others who have been readers of the Weekly Review for forty or fifty years, may remember the Fisher family.

In addition to the parents, who lived in Peterborough in the early days, there were seven sons, John, Amos, Thomas, George, William, Luke and Hugh Fisher. Of these three or four are still living by last accounts. At one time the family kept hotel in the building so long known as the Commercial House, at the corner of George and Brock streets, and before that in the big two story, rough-cast building, with double verandah, that stood on the ground now covered by buildings at the corner of George and Hunter streets, west side. The hotel was the rendezvous for large numbers of river men, who gathered in this district in early spring to run the timber down the river from the lakes above.

The circumstances I am about to relate took place some thirty-five years ago, but every detail is as fresh in my memory as if it had only happened yesterday; and I may tell you that when it happened the affair set the whole country-side in a blaze of excitement. At that time—1877, to be exact—a certain T. J. Fisher kept the largest hotel in Peterborough, Canada. He was a jolly good fellow, and a general favorite with all who frequented his house.

It had been the custom for some years for himself and a number of friends to go on an autumn hunting trip, usually lasting two or three weeks, to what was known as the "North Woods"—a vast region covered with virgin forest, and teeming with game of all sorts, a veritable paradise for the ardent sportsman.

The men had built a comfortable lodge in the wilderness, where, after strenuous days of hunting and fishing, they returned and spent the evenings in telling stories and the nights in rest.

Late one night, during the third week of their stay in the woods, the men were aroused by piercing screams, evidently coming from a woman. It took but a few minutes for the hunters to get into their clothes and out of doors, just in time for the foremost one to hear a man's voice say:—

"I guess she is down deep enough now."

Sounds of hurried footsteps departing from the vicinity followed; then there was silence.

As best they could, the puzzled hunters searched around in the intense darkness for the cause of the disturbance; but they found nothing, and accordingly returned to the lodge to wait for daylight. When it was light enough they got astir again, looking for they knew not what. At no great distance from the hut, in the direction from which the cries had come, they finally came upon a place where the ground had been recently disturbed, and round about this spot were many footprints and the traces of a severe struggle.

"Boys, this begins to look pretty serious!" exclaimed Mr. Fisher, as he examined the newly-turned ground. "Suppose we find out what's buried here?"

This was agreed to, and when tools had been fetched the men began removing the loose earth. Only a foot beneath the surface, to their intense astonishment, they found the body of a young and pretty girl of about nineteen!

"That scream we heard meant murder!" exclaimed Mr. Fisher, staring down horror-struck at the body. "Come, here, doctor, and see if you can tell if she is really dead. I wish I could get my hands on the fellow we heard speaking. The dastardly cur!"

Dr. Green came up and carefully examined the body.

"Why, boys," he cried, excitedly, "I believe there is life in the girl yet! Let us get her to the lodge as soon as we can!"

With all speed the girl was carried into the building and laid upon the table, and the doctor began his battle for her life. He worked for some time with no apparent results; then he looked up and said:—

"Give me your brandy-flask, Fisher; and you, Jack, get some hot water as soon as possible."

Every man of them was willing and ready to do anything to aid the doctor in his fight for the beautiful girl's life. For a long time the issue was touch and go, but in the end the doctor won. At the end of an hour the patient drew a faint sighing breath, and the anxious bystanders, almost as one, murmured in fervent tones: "Thank God, she lives!"

Not yet, however, was the battle over.

"Stand back, friends!" the doctor commanded. "The girl must have air, and plenty of it, or this little spark of life will go out. Give me some more brandy; I must supply the fuel until the fire is fully lighted again. Poor girl; she has been hardly used! Just look at these marks on her head and shoulders. The blow on the head was a hard one; had it been a little nearer the temple she would not have survived it a moment. I wonder who she is?"

"I think I know, doctor," said Jack Porter, a rising young lawyer who was of the hunting party. "She is Miss Masters, old Grimshaw's niece, the little girl who has been living in his home since her mother died. There has been a good deal of mystery about the family. There is money, I believe, but to whom it belongs no one knows."

"Please stop talking, Jack," said Dr. Green; "I want to listen. I wish I had my stethoscope with me. Yes, the heart is beating, with slow, regular beats. Excuse me for interrupting you, Jack. Go on with your remarks."

"All right, doctor!" replied Porter. "I was going to say that there have been strange stories told of old Grimshaw and his great, hulking lout of a son. I don't believe there is a right-minded man in the town who would not enjoy pounding that fellow. Jove, the whole story comes back to me now! I heard a few months ago that this little girl had been engaged to Robert Ingram, my classmate and friend, who died out West a few months ago. He was, as you who have met him know, a splendid fellow, one that any girl might be proud to love. The two had known each other since they both were children, and loved each other almost as long.

"After Peter Grimshaw's wife died there was some mischief set afoot, and in some way—how I don't know—the engagement between Robert and Miss Masters was broken off, and Robert left town. His business had been ruined by Peter and Robert Grimshaw, it was said. In some way old Grimshaw had his clutches on him, and it was all up with him in a business way. Poor chap; he lost his sweetheart as well!

Just as Jack finished speaking the girl opened a pair of beautiful hazel eyes, stared dazedly at the doctor, and, in terrified tones, exclaimed:

"Save me! Don't let them kill me! They can have the money if they will let me live!"

"No one shall harm you, my dear girl!" replied Dr. Green, soothingly. "We'll see to that! Here, take this medicine and go to sleep; you will feel better when you wake up."

The doctor lifted the girl from the table and placed her on a cot-bed, where she soon dropped into an uneasy slumber, muttering meanwhile unintelligible phrases expressive of terror.

At the end of about three hours the girl wakened to full consciousness, and looked around the lodge, with its rough furnishings, in bewilderment. Finally her gaze sought the faces of Mr. Fisher and Dr. Green.

"Where am I, and where is Uncle Peter and Mr. Babbington?" she demanded.

"We do not know where they are," replied the doctor. "How do you feel now?"

"My head aches dreadfully." She started, and a look of horror flashed across her face. "Oh, now I remember! Don't let them get me again!"

"You are safe here; no one shall hurt you," the doctor replied. "But explain whom it is you fear."

"My uncle—he is not really my uncle, but my aunt's husband—and that awful old man they call 'Miser Babbington.'"

"How came you in the woods where we found you? You need not fear to tell us, for we are your friends."

The girl sat up with a pitiful little gesture.

"I am afraid to say anything," she said; "yet I must confide in someone, for I am completely alone since aunt died last spring, and now I need friends more than ever."

"We will be your friends to a man," said the doctor, earnestly. "We rescued you from a horrible death, so that you need have no fear in confiding in us. First of all, though, you must have something to eat," and he handed her a bowl of soup that had been prepared for her.

After the girl had partaken of the food she seemed stronger, and a faint tinge of color came into her pale cheeks.

"Now I will tell you about myself," she said. "My mother and father died within a short time of each other four years ago, leaving a large fortune, of which my uncle and aunt were to be the custodians; they were also to act as my guardians until I should be twenty-one years of age, when I should come into sole possession. A week ago I learned that there was a clause in my father's will to the effect that, in the event of my death, my aunt and uncle would inherit the fortune.

"I had a pleasant time until the death of my aunt, who was my father's sister. Just before my aunt died Mr. Babbington began to come more frequently to the house, and became disgustingly attentive to me. He is a horrid old man, over sixty years old. After my aunt's death the attentions of this man became still more marked, but I loathed him, and showed it so plainly that he and my uncle both noticed it, and the latter took me to task for my rudeness to his friend, telling me I must marry the old man, or else he would send me away.

"'Send me away, then!' I exclaimed, hotly, when he made this threat. "I shall be glad to go! The

CHINA'S AWFUL FAMINE.

Floods and War Make the Yangtze Valley a Horror Spot.

It is difficult to bring home to the American public an adequate realization of the awful conditions in the famine stricken district. Thousands of men, women and children were shivering in their rags, gaunt, hungry and hopeless. Women, so faint they could scarcely stand, were seen carrying dead babies in their arms, the snow stained with blood that oozed from their poor, crippled feet. For miles around the trees were denuded of bark, and the ground was dug up in every direction for roots, the only food many of the sufferers had tasted for days.

The latest floods were the worst experienced in years. Almost the entire province of Anhui has been submerged for some time, and more than 95 per cent of the crops were destroyed. The loss in Anhui province alone was terrific. In a single district over 100,000 acres of rice fields were destroyed in one day, and in a neighboring district, a few days later, 20,000 more acres were swept clean. Other districts met a similar fate, and thousands of thrifty farmers have become homeless beggars.

What little was left by the flood was taken by the soldiers of the revolution, and the Yangtze valley swarms with starving refugees, fleeing from the homes of their ancestors in search of work and food. Neither is available, as conditions throughout the Yangtze valley cannot possibly improve for the next four months.—George Mooser in Leslie's.

The Kaiser's Castles.

The kaiser, who recently celebrated his fifty-third birthday, is the possessor of nearly ninety estates, the biggest of which has an area of 250,000 acres. But this is not all. Emperor Wilhelm holds the record as the owner of castles, which now number close on sixty. In Potsdam alone he possesses thirteen, while one built for his majesty at Posen, in Prussia, took over five years to erect and cost £250,000. Another castle, in Alsace, which had fallen into ruin, he had restored at a cost of £60,000. But, not content with that, last year he bought a villa in Corfu, built for the late empress of Austria. The kaiser seldom resides in his castles. They are merely kept up for political reasons.

Machinery and Matches.

A log of wood and a roll of paper are placed in a new matchmaking machine, and when human hands next touch the material it is all bound up in packages of one gross of boxes of matches ready for the consumer. During the process the machine cuts the wood into proper lengths, sulphurs the ends, counts them, makes the paper boxes, prints the labels on them, fills each box and packs them. The machine has been patented by a Norwegian match company.—Argonaut.

Our Postage Stamps.

A statistician has figured out that if all the stamps issued by the government during the past fiscal year were collected and laid end to end they would form a chain 18,000 miles long, about equal to the distance from New York to the Philippines. The number was 10,061,439,768, representing a face value of $180,957,385. Of the whole number 5,130,249,018 were two cent stamps and 3,798,961,039 were one cent stamps. But one thirty cent stamp was issued.

DIABETES

is one of the most cruel maladies of which mankind is subject, the many complications arising from time to time, making life seem almost unbearable. For many diseases, medical, scientific, and physiological knowledge and experience gained from years of deep research, has achieved remarkable results, but, up to now, little has been discovered of practical value in the treatment and cure of Diabetes. In fact, people have begun to look upon the disease as well-nigh incurable. Even in the medical profession can be found doctors who are of the same opinion, regarding sceptically any claim to ameliorate or improve the condition of a diabetic patient.

It can, however, be proved that SANSOL'S ANTIDIABETES lastingly cures all cases of Diabetes. Full particulars can be obtained from the Sansol Mfg. Co., Winnipeg, Man.

COMING FROM THEIR TOMB.

The Official Standards of Weights and Measures In England.

In April of this year a ceremony is due to be performed in London which occurs only at intervals of twenty years. This is the comparison of the standards of weights and measures.

The official standards in use at the office of weights and measures are compared with the original standard yard measure and pound weight, which repose in the wall of one of the inner staircases of the house of commons.

The hole in the wall where the two standards are kept is rather like a small tomb, and it can only be opened by actually tearing down the wall.

The yard measure is a bronze bar thirty-eight inches long, on which thirty-six divisions of one inch—i. e., a yard—have been marked off. The standard pound is of platinum, and, despite its weight and the fact that the metal of which it consists is worth $200, in size it is no more than a cubic inch.

No variations were detected when the standards were last compared in April, 1892, and the precious standards were then walled up once more in their dark little tomb; where for twenty years they have been undisturbed.—Pearson's Weekly.

Baltimore and Conventions.

Down to the period of the war between the states Baltimore was a favorite place for national conventions. Candidates for president nominated there by all parties, beginning with 1832, include Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, Martin Van Buren, James K. Polk, John Tyler, Zachary Taylor, Lewis Cass, Franklin Pierce, General Scott, Stephen A. Douglas, John C. Breckinridge, John Bell and Abraham Lincoln (in 1864).

New York's Wealth.

According to the tabulation figures in the tax books for 1912 real estate in New York is assessed at $7,525,474,063. Estimating the realty which is exempt from taxation at $2,500,000,000, the value of all real estate in the five boroughs approximates $10,000,000,000. The assessed valuation of taxable property in New York has been raised in the last fourteen years, or since consolidation, from $2,463,135,687.—New York American.

Moving Picture Lion Hunting.

The inhabitants of Fontainebleau are protesting against some of the uses to which the picturesque forest, with its huge volcanic bowlders, is being put by some of the cinematographic companies. There was a lion hunt with a real lion in the forest of Fontainebleau a few days ago, and the people who live in the neighborhood think that freedom in trade matters is being pushed somewhat too far.—Paris Letter.

Attacking the Gulf Stream.

The idol shatterers have now assailed the gulf stream and say that the talk about it carrying warm winds to temper the stolid cold of the British islands is all bosh. In the name of science they say that the stream has no influence whatever on the climate of Great Britain.

As a Counter Irritant.

"Doctor, is modern medical science really making any advance in treating rheumatism?"

"Yes; it has discovered what is believed to be an absolute specific."

"What's the name of it?"

"Acetylmethylenedisalicylic acid."

"What?"

"I won't say it again. I'll write it."

"How do you take it?"

"I don't suppose you take it at all. You practice learning to pronounce it, and that makes you forget your rheumatism."

The Horrid Things.

"I didn't see you at either Sue's or Helen's party last week," said one.

"I was ill and couldn't go to either," replied the other.

"Well, at Sue's they talked about you a whole lot."

"The horrid things!"

"But at Helen's they didn't mention your name."

"The horrid things!"—New York Telegraph.

A Darky's Partnership.

Senator John Sharp Williams tells the following as illustrating the simplicity of the old time darky in the south:

Mr. Williams was once proceeding along a road near a Mississippi town when he met an aged negro hauling driftwood into his farmyard. There the senator saw a pile of wood already stacked to such an extent that he was moved to say:

"Uncle you've gathered a big lot of firewood, haven't you?"

"I shore has," chuckled the old man, "an' what you sees ain't half what I've picked up dis season."

"What did you do with the rest of it—sell it?"

"No, sah. I toles it up to Mr. Perkins' place, 'bout a mile from heah. Me an' him is partners, an' he lets me have half of all de wood I picks up."—St. Louis Republic.

Not Expensive.

"You must take exercise," said a physician to a patient. "The motorcar in a case like yours gives the best exercise"—

"But, doctor, I can't afford to keep a motorcar," the patient growled.

"Don't buy; just dodge!" said the doctor.—Christian Life.

Neglect is responsible for most Watches going wrong. A Watch should be thoroughly overhauled, at least once a year. HAROLD HILL AND JAMES MILLOY WON THE MEDALS IN ORATORICAL CONTESTS

The students of the P.C.I. gave to a very large audeince in the Collegiate assembly hall last night a concert that was worthy of the highest praise. Every selection on the varied program was given the closest attention by the audience, and all were very heartily applauded.

The musical part of the evening's entertainment was contributed to by Miss K. Moore, in a solo; the Glee Club, choruses; Mr. Ferguson, a solo, and Misses Bernice Giroux and Katholine O'Brien in an instrumental duet.

The Glee Club's selections were certainly appreciated, and under the direction of Mr. Ferguson of the P.C.I. staff, they rendered their numbers with the almost accuracy of expression and harmony. Miss Moore secured the favor of the audience in singing her first few lines. Her voice was very pleasing in its sweetness and she has perfect control, accompanied by the ability to sound the highest notes perfectly.

Mr. Ferguson was encored in "The Admiral's Broom," and gave as a second selection, "You'd Better Ask Me." In this he made a decided hit and only his modesty made him refrain from answering the call of the audience for a third solo. The instrumental duet by Misses O'Brien and Giroux proved to be a lively piece of music that was reproduced with great skill by the two young pianists.

The humorous recitation by Miss K. Nicholls deserved the very hearty applause it elicited, and her second recitation in encore, "A Mistake," was equally well received.

The three addresses given in competition for the honors and medal in connection with winning the senior oratorical contest were indeed surprises to the audience. Each speaker handled his subject with the greatest skill, and dealt with it reasonably and thoroughly. In all cases the language was good, the logic sound and the deliverance masterly.

CONSERVATION.

The first address was by Meredith S. Huycke, on the "Conservation of Natural Resources." In beginning he said: "If we do not pay attention to these valuable assets what will become of Canada in a few years, the wealth of a nation being its material resources." The speaker went on into an exhaustive discussion of the subject showing that needless waste was being countenanced in the mining of minerals in Canada, particularly coal, and demonstrating in neatly arranged arguments that more drastic measures are needed in conserving our great natural wealth, of which we are, and should be, proud. The speech was one of unusual interest, and held the attention of the audience throughout.

PEACE MOVEMENT.

Mr. Harold F. Hill was the next speaker, his subject being the "Peace Movement." The speaker believed that this movement would attain its avowed end. As reason for this he went into details concerning the growing sympathy between the working class of different nations and because, before a war can come about one people must have a decided enmity for the other. The question of war depends now on the common people who are enlightened and see that they must bear the expense of such undertakings. Then, too, it was clearly proven that bankers had a large part to play in deciding whether or not war should be declared. As an illustration he cited the recent case of the Franco-German ill-feeling where, when the French bankers commenced withdrawing their German loans the project of war in the Kaiser's country was immediately abandoned.

HOME RULE.

Mr. Ernest Langford's speech on "Home Rule" followed. In it the speaker made an eloquent attack on Home Rule, and in the course of his address showed by well balanced sentences and reasoning, which was clearly and forcibly expressed that for several reasons the Home Rule Bill should not become law. He offered as a solution for the overpress of work in the Imperial House of Commons, the giving of more power to municipal, and groups of municipal bodies.

Mr. Chisholm decidedd in favor of the second speaker, Mr. Harold Hill, whose arguments, he thought, were easily followed by his hearers. To him he presented the medal donated by Mr. H. R. H. Kenner.

To Mr. James Milloy he presented the junior medal for the public speaking contest, donated by Mr. S. J. Stubbs.

Mr. Chisholm, in a short speech, congratulated the society on the work they were doing.

Mr. Roy Dixon, president of the P.C.I. Philomathean Society, discharged the duties of chairman in the most acceptable manner.

DROWNING OF PETERBORO' LUMBERMAN IS RECALLED

Bobcaygeon, April 20.—The rising water is setting people to talk of other years. Garner Nicholls thinks it is forty-two years since the high level record. He was farming in Ennismore that spring, and conveyed his seed potatoes in a log canoe across the fields of his neighbor, and fish were speared that spring around the stone piles in the fields. That was the spring that Mr. Sam Dixon, the lumberman, of Peterborough, was drowned off his own dam. The river flooded over the floors of the lower story of Mr. M. Boyd's house, at that time.

REMEMBERS CASE IN WHICH GIRL WAS RESCUED

Mr. Wm. McGregor Was Living in Peterboro

Mr. Wm. McGregor of Young's Young's Point was in the city to-day and it so happened that a Review representative met and conversed with him.

Knowing Mr. McGregor to have been a resident of Peterboro in its early days, the Review man brought up the case, which is given in interesting details, elsewhere in this issue.

Mr. McGregor remarked that he remembered the case quite well, and that the burial of the girl was a fact. He was well acquainted with Mr. Fisher, whose hotel was at the south west corner of Hunter and George streets, where Mr. Wm. Madill now operates his drug business. The community was greatly stirred up over the affair at the time and the subject was a live one for discussion for a long time.

SMALL WASHOUT ON THE C.P.R.

About three miles east of Peterborough on the C.P.R. line to Ottawa, the spring freshets have caused a washout that, it is estimated, will cost the C.P.R. Company over $1000 before they have remedied it.

Ever since the first of the Spring waters began to flow, the streams have threatened to wash away the walls of the stone culvert under the railway track at that point, but not until this week has there been any evidence of damage in that direction. But since the first of the week, the masonery has been loosened and on Wednesday, a considerable number of men were kept working all night, in repairing the damages and making it fit for the trains to cross.

So far the trains have been able to pass the washout, by stopping before they come to it and slowly going over. This is made possible by the constant efforts of the several section gangs that are at work.

To-day a large derrick arrive on the scene and it is hoped that things will soon be righted again, and that all inconvenience and danger will be eliminated.

LIFE UNDERWRITERS ASSOCIATION

Industrial Insurance was the subject discussed at the regular meeting of the Life Underwriters' Association of Central Ontario, held last evening in Hooper's grill room. The attendance was very good and the repast, first class.

Mr. John Rothwell gave a very instructive talk on the foundation and growth of industrial insurance going into the details of the business He traced its history and its start in England, then in the United States and Canada. He explained thoroughly its working operations, and of the class of people who found the system the most helpful.

Mr. J. I. Allin, also briefly reviewed the system and its wonderful growth.

Mr. Thomas Mark, president of the Association, presided.

Mr. P. A. Ferguson, of Lindsay, was present.

MAY HAVE GONE DOWN ON THE BIG LINER

As the result of the "Titanic" fatality, Mr. A. Archer, of Fowlers' Corners is feeling rather perturbed in mind as to the welfare of a young farm-hand formerly in his employ, who went home on a visit to friends in England last December. The young fellow, aged nineteen, before leaving him promised to return in April. He would sail from Liverpool hence Mr. Archer's fears that he may have taken passage on the ill-fated liner, and been lost, are quite reasonable. As a guarantee that he intended to come back, some of his belongings were left behind with his employer. Mr. Archer thinks the lad would have sailed third class or steerage and is very anxious to get a complete list of names of those who sailed.

The young man was a Barnado Home boy, and before engaging with Mr. Archer, worked five years for an Emily farmer. He had been with Mr. Archer about one year and a half, during which time his employer took quite a fancy to him.

FIFTEEN-YEAR-OLD MISS THREATENED TO TAKE HER OWN LIFE IF LOVER DID NOT RETURN AND WED HER

A marriage occurred in town on Monday, which is the sequel to a somewhat sensational romance and near-tragedy, says the Barrie Advance. Last Friday, Miss Sophia Carter, of Angus, (aged 15 summers, threatened to commit suicide by taking poison, if her lover, Wm. Royce Adams (or Wm. Adams Royce, as he afterwards signed his name), aged 19, did not come from Peterborough and marry her. The amorous young lady was brought to Barrie jail, where she then told a story of the intimacy of Royce and herself, and of her mother's refusal to allow them to become man and wife. The objection was overcome, on persuasion of the Crown Attorney, and Detective Beardsley made a trip to Peterborough for the hero of the romance. He found him picking Quaker Oats and explained the circumstances, when the trip to Barrie was readily acceded to.

On Monday morning the girl appeared before Judge Wismer and was remanded for 24 hours to attend her own wedding, which was being arranged for by the Deputy Sheriff. The ceremony was performed on Monday afternoon, and on Tuesday Mr. and Mrs. Royce left for Peterborough.

The girl's father is now serving a term in the Kingston Penitentiary for committing an offence against his own daughter.

The local lodges of the I.O.O.F. will celebrate the 93rd anniversary of the Order in St. Thomas, April 28th.

States That Parisian Sage is Best Hair Tonic

"I had a bad case of dandruff. My sclap was full of dandruff and it came out thick and scaly. My hair came out badly; often I nearly cried on account of losing my pretty head of hair.

I heard of PARISIAN SAGE and only had to use two bottles, before the hair stopped coming out, the scalp became clean, and all the dandruff disappeared. The hair became silky and one big reason that I liked PARISIAN SAGE was that it kept the hair smooth, silky, and clean with no traces of stickiness.

I believe this tonic to be the best on the market as there has been no return of dandruff, or hair falling out whatever. I am glad to publicly endorse the use of PARISIAN SAGE. I have often endorsed its use and am glad to do it." 33 E. Bond Street, Corry, Pa.

PARISIAN SAGE, the delightful hair dressing and beautifier sold by Wm. Madill and druggists everywhere. Guaranteed for falling hair, dandruff and scalp itch. Large bottle 50 censt.

Told By Survivors

Thomas Wilson, one of the seamen survivors of the Titanic, said that the only showing of cowardice on the boat was when an Italian jumped into a lifeboat ahead of the women and refused to get out at the command of an officer, who immediately drew a revolver and shot him in the cheek.

W. T. Stead in Bed

Wm. T. Stead, the noted English journalist and author, calmly sauntered on to the deck of the Titanic after she struck the iceberg. Quietly he discussed with fellow-passengers the probable size of the great berg, towering only a short distance away, expressing the opinion that a few were "unnecessarily alarmed."

"I think I will turn in," he ventured to his companion, turned on his heel, and went to his stateroom. He was never seen again on deck, according to fellow-passengers. It is believed that he went right to bed and to sleep, and in blissful unconsciousness he passed with the great vessel into the spirit world, of which he was so fond of writing.

Slipped off the Raft

Daniel T. Bailey, New York, said: "I was adrift alone in a raft for six hours. I saw a woman in night clothing near by, swam to her side and dragged her to the raft. She was unconscious and slipped off into the water and was drowned."

Lifeboats Sucked Down

William Jones, a Titanic stoker who manned one of the lifeboats, said he was 700 yards away when the vessel sank, and that he saw four lifeboats, filled with women, drawn down. Two women in his boat died of exposure.

Found Baby Girl

Margaret Hayes, New York, said, "When I was put into a lifeboat I found a two-year-old baby girl in my arms. I do not know who placed it there, nor who its mother is. I have been taking care of it ever since."

Stuck to His Key

Phillips, the wireless operator of the Titanic, stuck to his key. "I'll never forget his sticking to that key with the water washing his legs," said his assistant, Harold Bride, "When the captain himself had told him to save himself. He would have stuck longer if he had been able to sen anything. He went down with the ship."

Mr. Astor's Farewell

"I saw Mr. Hays shortly before I left the boat," said Mrs. Candee of Washington, " and he appeared calm and collected. Mrs. Hays had left him by that time. I also saw Mr. Astor and his wife part. As the boat in which Mrs. Astor was leaving started he stood on the rail and waved his hand throwing kisses.

This Man Dived

"It was a very bright night, and I could not see any icebergs," said C. H Roman of Kentucky. "I saw that the Titanic was sinking and decided I would take my chances swimming. I knew if I stayed long I would be drawn down by the suction. I dived off the deck into the sea and was picked up by one of the lifeboats."

Locked in Her Children

"I saw one Swedish woman who was outside with her five little children go back into her cabin, and I heard the click of the key in the door," said James Tanglin of Iowa. "One English woman went over to the piano, while the Italians simply fell on their knees to pray without making an effort to save themselves."

Died With Her Husband

Mrs. Isador Straus was drowned because she would not leave her husband. A person who was standing beside the aged couple on the deck of the Titanic heard Mr. Straus say to his wife: "Get into the lifeboat." To that she replied: "I will not leave you. I will get into the boat only if you will."

Mr. Straus refused to make a move toward the boat. They must have died together.

Went Out of Her Mind

May R. Birkhead, a passenger on the Carpathia, said: " Many of the survivors of the Titanic, especially women, as may be expected, were in a violent state of excitement when rescued, and one women appeared to have lost her mind entirely. There were no bodies to be seen afterward, except that of a child which was support by a life preserver. It presumably had been frozen to death One second cabin woman lost seven children out of a family of ten."

MARCONIGRAMS

The Titanic is said to have had davits for four times as many life-boats as she actually carried.

Among the lost property in the Titanic disaster is a bronze bust of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which was being brought over by the sculptor, Mr. Paul Chevre. The artist was saved.

John Sage, who went to England from Saskatchewan three months ago to bring his wife and family to Canada, is believed to have perished in the Titanic wreck with his wife and nine children.

The King has sent a donation of $2,625 to the Mansion House fund for the relatives of those who perished. The Queen has donated $1,310, and the Queen-mother Alexandra $1,000 to the same fund.

The Titanic and cargo were valued at $12,500,000.

The insurance loss is placed at $25,000,000.

The baggage loss has been estimated at $1,600,000.

The Titanic sank in two miles of water, but divers cannot work at a greater depth than 100 feet.

People who raise objections are always sure of a bountiful crop.

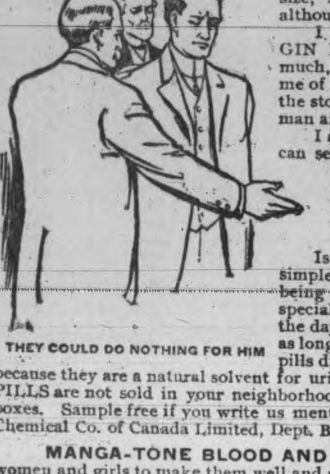
DOCTORS AFRAID TO OPERATE

Could Not Remove Stone From The Bladder. Gin Pills Enabled Him To Pass It.

JOLIETTE, P. Q.

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone In The Bladder. He decided on an operation and was assisted by another doctor. They said the calculus was larger than a bean and too hard to crush, and that they could not take it out.

I returned home suffering greatly, and did not know what to do, but was recommended by a friend to try GIN PILLS. I bought a box and found relief from the pain at once. I took a second and third box of GIN PILLS after which I went back to the specialist.



THEY COULD DO NOTHING FOR HIM

He told me the calculus was reduced in size, still he could not relieve me of it, although he tried for two and a half hours.

I returned home and continued to take GIN PILLS as they reduced the pain very much, but I did not expect they would relieve me of the stone, but to my great joy, I passed the stone on October 3rd, and am now a well man and very happy.

I am sending the stone to you so that you can see for yourself what a great work GIN PILLS did for me. GIN PILLS are the best medicine in the world and because they did so much for me, I will recommend them all the rest of my life".

J. ALBERT LESSARD.

Isn't it wonderful? Just think of these simple pills, that even children can take, being able to perform what the greatest specialists in Canada could not do. Surely, the days of the miracle have not passed away, as long as we have Gin Pills. These wonderful pills dissolve stone in the bladder or kidneys because they are a natural solvent for uric acid, which causes calculus. If GIN PILLS are not sold in your neighborhood, send us 50c. for a box or $2.50 for 6 boxes. Sample free if you write us mentioning this paper. National Drug and Chemical Co. of Canada Limited, Dept. VIVID TALE OF DISASTER

Major Peuchen, the One Male Survivor from Canada

CHARGES CARELESSNESS

Captain and Crew, He Says, Were Open to Censure---Hundreds of Men Died Like Heroes

The mystery which has shrouded the last hours of the famous Canadians who went down to their doom with the ill-fated liner Titanic, was penetrated when Major Arthur Peuchen, of the Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto, and president of the Standard Chemical company, related the story of his own miraculous escape from the sea. Major Peuchen alone of the ten Canadian men on the Titanic has returned to tell of the last hours of his friends who perished with the ship. It was only his training as a sailor and a soldier, and his own physical agility which singled him out as the commander of the sixth lifeboat to leave the ship, and thus saved his life.

Before parting from the fast sinking Titanic, Major Peuchen spoke briefly with the late Mr. C. M. Hays, general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway. "GOODBYE, PEUCHEN, I FEEL THAT THIS SHIP WILL LAST ANOTHER EIGHT HOURS, AND BY THAT TIME WE SHALL HAVE ASSISTANCE," were the last known words of the great railway magnate.

One of the most cherished objects which Major Peuchen bore with him from the wreck, is a small piece of coarse paper, on which is scrawled the Major's sea commission. This paper stood between death and its victim, and to it Major Peuchen owes his life. It reads:

"Major Arthur Peuchen was ordered into the boat by me owing to the fact that I required a seaman, which he proved to be, as well as a brave man.

(Signed)

D. C. H. LYNTOLLIE.

"Second Officer late SS. Titanic."

This is Major Peuchen's instruction for taking over the sixth lifeboat instead of remaining on board to go to his fate with the other Canadians who were his associates.

Major Peuchen gained his seafaring knowledge as the skipper of the yacht Vireda, which he sailed in Toronto for six years. With him also sailed the late Mr. Hugo Ross, of Winnipeg, one of the Titanic's Canadian victims.

The Major told his story on his arrival at the Waldorf Hotel, surrounded by his two children and wife, and his brother-in-law, Mr. Wm. Thompson, of Orillia, Ontario.

Major Peuchen's Story

"It was Sunday evening, a starry night, and calm," he said "There was an exceptional bill-of-fare on for evening dinner. We were all in evening dress, and, probably the ladies with many a jewel. Music went on as usual. I dined with Mr. Markland Molson, Mr. and Mrs. Allison, and their little girl. Everything was exceptionally bright. Then I went to the smoking room and met Mr. Beattie, a partner of Mr. Hugo Ross of Winnipeg, formerly of Toronto. I also met Mr. McCarthy, of the Union Bank, of Vancouver, and a financial man from Toronto. Tlk was unusually bright. This was about at eleven o'clock. Then I said, 'Good-night, I am going to turn in.' I had just reached my berth when I heard a dull thud. It was not like a collision, and I didn't think it serious. That's extraordinary I thought, and went up to see. I ran upstairs, and, on the way, met a friend who laughingly said that we had struck an iceberg and we went upon deck.

"There we found that we had struck aft of the bow, about seventy-five feet from the point, and had scraped along the starboard side. It must either have shifted the keel or ripped open the side for we began to take in water along the whole length of the boat. The bulkheads were, therefore, no use. I went on deck and saw the ice falling on us. The berg was about 70 ft. high. Our boat itself was seven decks high, and the berg was even with the upper deck. As the berg passed the portholes it alarmed the women in the berths. The passengers came on deck, one by one, some in pyjamas, some in evening gowns. They were not yet much alarmed. I went inside and spoke with my friend Molson. Mr. Hugo Ross was sick in bed. Then I got in touch with Mr. Chas. M. Hays and Mr. Thornton Davidson, son-in-law of Mr. Hays. Then, four of us, Mr. Hays, Mr. Molson, and Mr. Davidson, went up to see the ice.

Saw She Was Listing

"I, then, for the first time, saw she was listing. This was about fifteen minutes after the strike. 'My, she is listing,' I said. Then I noticed that all the people were putting on lifebelts, and, for the first time, it looked serious. I wouldn't believe it, however, knowing that the Titanic was such a safe boat. Finally, I realized the seriousness of the thing, to have to put on life preservers at midnight, far out in midocean. I went inside, threw off my dress suit, put on my warmest clothes, and my steward, a very nice fellow helped me put on my life preserver. I never saw him again.

"I took three oranges and a pearl pin. There was $200,000 worth of stocks and bonds, all my jewelry, and presents for my daughter Jessie and family in the berth, but I didn't touch them.

"It was rather sad to turn and leave the cheery room I had occupied cosy, large and comfortable as it was. When I got outside, all the people lined up with life preservers in the companionway made matters look very serious.

"Prior to this I went to warn Mr. Ross who was ill in bed. I met Mr. Beattie, and he went in and warned Mr. Ross. On the top deck, as mounted, all the boats were swung out ready for action. Just at that moment a mob of stokers swarmed up to the decks. The first officer, a big burly fellow, drove them back. Then I found they were shorthanded and I assisted. I helped cut off all the cords on the first lifeboat, and to take out the sail. Then I assisted in putting the ladies in the boats and the officers sood nearby, we filled the first boat and lowered it. The women kissed their husbands good-bye the husbands assisted their wives to the boats, and then stood back like any other men.

Wives Stayed With Husbands

"We then lowered the second boat. When the wife refused to go without the husband, the wife had to stand by the same rule prevailed with a mother and a daughter. The officer on the starboard side was lenient, and then it was that many men got in. The officer on the port side was very severe, and would allow none but women and children to enter the boats.

"The boats were not filled to capacity. One boat had only 23 in it but its capacity was 60. The officer replied to my query over this condition that the boat chains would not hold the heavy load of a full boat. The capacity of 60 could only be had when the lifeboat was on the water.

"Every woman who cared to go was taken off. There was no necessity for any woman being left behind. Finally we came to the sixth boat. The quartermaster let the boat down part way. Then he said: 'We have only one seaman in the boat, we want three or four more seamen.'

"I then went forward and said: 'I am a yachtsman and can handle a boat with any man.'

"He told me to go below and get into the lifeboat from the lower deck.

"But I said I will jump for it. Taking hold of a halyard I swung out into space. Luckily I caught my feet against the block and lowered myself to the boat, a distance of four and a half decks, probably 60 feet, down a rope into the darkness. I tell you it required nerve."

"Did you land on anyone?" asked Major Peuchen's daughter, Jessie.

Saw Lights Going Out

"No, I didn't," he replied. "I ran forward into the boat and ordered the seaman to put the plug into the boat. They had neglected to do this. He came back and said: "This boat is going to founder,' referring to the Titanic.

"We rowed away like good fellows. At last I saw there was no hope. The decks were disappearing tier by tier into the sea as the lights on each deck went out. The Titanic was doomed. Just before I left the deck Hays was the last man I saw. He came up and said, 'Peuchen, good-bye. This boat is good for eight hours yet. By that time we shall have help and the boats will be able to unload and come back for more passengers. I have it from one of the best seamen on this ship that she can't sink. I am with Mr. Crosby, of Milwaukee, a boat-builder, who says she can't sink.' Then as we left we let off the first rockets. Elsewhere everything was quiet. The steerage was nowhere in evidence.

"I knew the boat was doomed. When I got down on the level I saw her serious position. She was sinking bow first. Then we began to row, without compass, without light, but with a little food and water. Our sailor in charge had also got at some brandy and was incapable. So we had no provisions. Number 13 was said to have no food or water on board. After we had rowed three-quarters of an hour towards a certain light, which this fool of ours thought was a vessel, he wanted to know if we thought it was a buoy. Then he called it a fishing smack but it proved to be the Northern Lights. He was the most stupid man I ever saw. He kept calling out this and that, and making incoherent remarks.

"I said, 'Why don't you help us to row?' but he became indignant, and replied: 'I am in control of this boat,' with a great show of anger.

"Then we heard an awful sound and a loud report boomed over the icy sea like an explosion. It was said that the tremndous weight of the Titanic going down by the nose caused an air pressure in the center amidships, and she broke in two, and foundered.

"Never have I heard such awful cries and shrieks. People came tumb ling down like so many oranges. Chain ropes, furniture, and human beings were hurled in a terrible jumble into the seas, as if rolling down a steep hill. During the whole time, the orchestra continued to play. First they played ragtime, then other tunes, and finally as they sank beneath the waves, the strains of 'Nearer My God, to Thee,' were wafted to us, until the waves closed over the heads of the gallant musicians. Only four persons werd saved at the last.

"In the morning the steamer went back over the scene of the disaster, but we did not see one person, nor a single corpse. There were in all sixteen lifeboats, two emergency boats, and two canvas decked rafts, making twenty. Two were filled with water

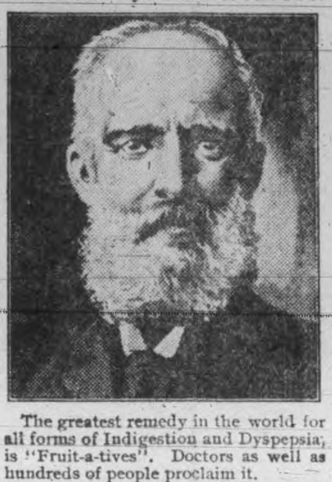
TORTURED FOR THIRTY FIVE YEARS

I really could not live without "Fruit-a-tives"

FENAGHVALE, ONT. Jan. 29th. 1910.

"For thirty-five years (and I am now a man over seventy) I have been a terrible sufferer from Constipation. No matter what remedy or physicians I employed, the result was always the same—impossible to get a cure. About two years ago, I read about 'Fruit-a-tives' and I decided to try them.

I have used 'Fruit-a-tives' ever since. They are the first and only medicine that suited my case. If it were not for 'Fruit-a-tives' I am satisfied that I could not live" JAMES PROUDFOOT.



The greatest remedy in the world for all forms of Indigestion and Dyspepsia, is "Fruit-a-tives". Doctors as well as hundreds of people proclaim it.

"Fruit-a-tives" cures all stomach troubles because it makes the liver active, strengthens the kidneys, purifies the blood and keeps the stomach sweet and clean. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only remedy made of fruit juices.

and sank, and about thirteen came to our big boat, the Carpathia.

"All alone we were on the barren sea. We yelled at intervals. Then all at once we saw the headlights of this steamer. The boat sank about two hours from the time she first struck the berg. My mind is that she struck at 12.30 and went down at 2.30.

I rowed from four o'clock until eight, when we reached a steamer That ship was the gladdest sight I ever saw. We were about the last to get alongside. The steamer was sixty-five miles away when she got the message. She immediately turned around and put on double stokers and made for us.

Dropped Exhausted

"Then, as the sun came up, we could see that she was a big steamer, with ladders down, ready for us to mount. I climbed up on deck, and dropped there, exhausted. They took off my life preserver, and put a blanket around me. I took a big black coffee and a brandy. They were kindness itself. Nothing could exceed the attention paid us by crew and passengers.

"Then came the sad part of it all. I had ten personal friends, Canadians on the Titanic. I began the search for them, and I saw Mrs. Hays and the Allison's nurse and baby. I went to look for Hugo Ross, Mr. Hays, Mr. Davidson, and Mr. Molson. But I was the only Canadian man on that boat. I kept going around the deck, but couldn't find them. One of the most ghastly things of all was to see one of the collapsible boats come in with a number of corpses. The boat overweighted with passengers, sank below the water level, and one by one as the victims exhausted sank into the water they were drowned and their corpses floated away. It was a ghastly sight. The boats arrived with the dead and living. Some of the boats we took aboard and some we let go with the bodies still in them.

"We then started to steam away and another vessel had come up an hour or so before we left. She was the Californian, and she cruised around to seek the survivors in hope that some were still alive.

"In my stateroom were three men who had jumped overboard, two Englishmen and an American. They said good-bye to those on deck, and then jumped. They swam to the raft and got aboard very quietly. The passengers on the raft were firemen and stokers, and the Englishmen feared they would not be permitted to board her. 'We were early to arrive,' they said. For after that they threw every one off who reached the raft. It was a case of every man for himself. We saved 200 of the crew, which was far too high a percentage. On the Carpathia there was a saddened crowd. Every woman had lost a husband, or father, or a brother. A great majority were widows. They were clad in evening dress, in night clothes, and in any garments they had hastily found. They presented a pitiable sight. Major Peuchen now ventured a criticism of the Titanic's management. He considered that the accident was inexcusable.

"If ordinary caution or good seamanship had been used," he stated, 'the accident would not have occurred. The Titanic was a good boat, luxuriously fitted up, and I have never seen anything to compare with her.

Wouldn't Slow Down for 'Bergs.

"When I got on at Southampton, I was pleased with her. But when I heard that our captain was Captain Smith, my heart rose in my mouth. Surely we are not going to have that man," I said. "An hour after sailing we got into a needless tangle with several other boats. We had a scratch crew on the Titanic, who knew little about the business. The weather changed suddenly, 30 degrees, on Sunday, from 6 to 11.30 o'clock. The officers stated that they had received wireless messages, telling of icebergs. Ismay, also, is said to have shown Miss Ryerson a message regarding icebergs. 'We will slow down then?' said she. 'No, I guess not,' Ismay reported to have said.

"At seven o'clock on the night of the accident the captain went to a dinner party in full dress and stayed until nine or ten-thirty, and I am at a loss to understand why a captain with 3,000 souls in his care and a ship approaching icebergs, should dine in a restaurant in that way.

"It was a calm night, and we could have seen icebergs on all hands if we had had a searchlight. We did not have a searchlight, but if we had, it would have averted the accident. We still ran at a rate of about twenty-five miles an hour, an excessively high rate of speed. We did not even slow up, and they did not put on any additional watches. I asked the officer afterwards as to the reason for the omission, but they would not answer.

"The man who rowed next to me in the lifeboat was the man on the crow's nest when the vessel struck. He said he had rung three bells on first seeing the iceberg, but had received no answer from the bridge.

"There was also no means taken to show passengers how to enter the lifeboats. The crew was inexperienced.'

Major Peuchen described Mr. Ismay's escape as follows:

"Ismay was on deck helping people into the boats. As the last boat come they ordered all the men away from it. They had also ordered oher people out of the same boat. I claim that the boats were highly insufficient in numbers, and that they were not properly filled or manned.

How Canadians Died

"When I last saw Mr. Markland Molson he wore his big coat, and was cheerful," commented Major Peuchen. "I shall never forget the expression on the face of Mrs. Allison. Two men led her up to the other side of the boat where Mr. Allison was. He had to be wakened twice, as he would not believe that there was any danger. She put the baby and nurse into a boat. The story of her death is cruelly tragic. She was on a raft which was patrially submerged with its load. She held on to a man's leg, but gradually her hold loosened, and she fell into the water covering the raft, and was drowned. Her body floated across the waves to join those of her husband and her child.

"We took up a subscription of about $3,000 on the Carpathia, which will go to the gallant sailors on that vessel and to the needy survivors. We shall also give a loving cup to the captain and officers.

Major Peuchen stated that the screams of Mrs. J. J. Astor alarmed the whole boat when she heard that she must put on a life preserver. The passengers were sleeping at the time, but the awful cries of fear roused ten sleepers to the reality of their danger who it was erroneously reported was on the Titanic with her husband.

MRS. J. BRUCE ISMAY

Perfet Behavior

Mrs. Dickinson Bishop, of Detriot said: "I was the first women in the first boat. I was in bed at the time the crash came. I got up and dressed and went back to bed on being assured that there was no danger. There were very few passengers on the deck when I came up. There was little or no panic. The behavior of the crew was perfect."

"It seemed to me that the discipline on board the boat was wonderful," said E. T. Taylor of Philadelphia.

OVER-WORKED KIDNEYS

Cause, Rush of Blood, Fullness, Dizziness.

J. T. Chetland, the well-known railway engineer of Hamilton, found the strain always resting upon men of his occupation vastly intensified by a tendency of the blood to rush to his head, and often at times when clearness of vision and great steadiness were demanded. Finding some difficulty in bending—a stiffness with pain having settled in his back, it occurred to him that his kidneys might be at fault. "This was a happy idea, for by it I not only got rid of the pain but many other troubles as well. I took a full dose of Dr. Hamilton's Pills and was glad to note that some obstruction of the kidneys, which I had lately noticed, was at once relieved. The flushed appearance of my face gave way to a more rational color and there was a perceptible improvement in my appetite. Dr. Hamilton's Pills certainly act splendidly upon the blood, removing heat and fulness and that sort of dizziness that makes a man at the throttle wish when it siezes him that he were elsewhere."

No medicine gives such unquestionably good results for stomach, liver, and blood troubles as Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they are mild, certain, and always curative. Refuse any substitute.

Lady Betty Across the Water

By C. N. & A. M. WILLIAMSON

Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

"Here he comes to speak for himself," cut in Sally, squeezing my hand hard.

There was a sound in the distance—voices shouting, but not the voice I loved. We all looked, and a black horse with a man on his back sprang into sight, like a rocket gone wrong. It was Jim, looking more beautiful than any picture of a man ever painted, his face transported with the joy of battle and triumph and that fiend in horse shape under him doing all he knew to kill.

It was a terrible and yet a splendid thing to see, that struggle. I hadn't known how I adored Jim and how I admired him till I saw him with that smile on his face, sitting the black devil as if he were one with him in spite of the brute's murderous plunges.

The two shot past the house like a streak of lightning, then wheeled back again, the horse clearing a ditch and a five barred fence from one meadow into another, but he didn't jump in spite of Jim; rather was it in spite of himself. Then there was a series of mad buck jumpings, leaps into the air and downward plunges. The beast sat on his haunches and then reared up with a great bound, to waltz on his hind legs and paw the air, snorting. But still Jim smiled and kept his seat without the least apparent effort.

"Jove! That fellow can ride!" muttered Stan, taken out of himself by his man's admiration for a man.

"It's Jim Brett—my Jim Brett!" I cried. "What do you think of him now?"

But it didn't occur to Stan to answer. I don't suppose he even heard. He was far too deeply absorbed in the passing drama, and in a minute more Jim and the black horse were out of sight again.

But I was not at all afraid for him now. I was only proud and sure—as sure as I was of life—that he would conquer.

Nobody spoke. Mr. Trowbridge and Mr. Jacobsen, the disagreeable cowbell man, who owned the horse, ran by as fast as they could go, too excited to glance at the house. Mrs. Trowbridge and the girls had come from the kitchen and were hanging over the nearest fence. Patty was whimpering a little, so I guessed all in a flash that she had cared for Jim.

We stood still in our places and watched. I could hear my heart beat, and it had not time to calm down before Jim came riding back on the black horse—a changed black horse, all winning airs and graces, to cover shamed penitence now.

The creature pirouetted up the side road, and Jim stopped him at the veranda, patting the throbbing black neck. "Well, I believe I'll buy him myself," he said, smiling to me, and then he saw Mrs. Ess Kay and my brother.

"By Jove, Harborough!" said Stan. "It is you, isn't it? Surely it isn't your double?"

"Harborough it is," said Jim, while I listened, dumb with wonder. "How are you, duke? I was rather expecting you might turn up, but I cabled to you last night to Boodles' and wrote you this morning on the chance you hadn't started."

"Well, I'm blowed," remarked Stan, most inelegantly. "Are you Brett or is Brett you, or is he somebody else?"

"My name is James Brett Harborough. Perhaps you didn't know or had forgotten," said Jim, and then, jumping off the horse and throwing the lines to Mr. Jacobsen, who had just trotted anxiously up, he came to me.

"Will you forgive me?" he asked.

"I don't know yet what it's all about," I said dully.

"Miss Woodburn knows and Mohunsleigh knows. You see, he and I were old pals, so I told him I was in love with his cousin and was going to try hard to win her in my own way. You remember Mohunsleigh's friend Harborough. You said the other day you were sorry for him, and—you wished him joy of his love affair."

"Oh, is that the reason you pretended to be only Jim Brett?"

"I am Jim Brett. But now you understand, will you forgive me?"

"I don't understand yet, except that you must have been afraid I might care more for your money than for you if I knew. Oh, how could you think such a thing of me? But about the steerage"—

"That was beforehand. It had nothing to do with you, though everything that was to come came from it. I was abroad for a couple of years and a friend I knocked against in Paris last June bet me $1,000 that in spite of all my queer experiences I wouldn't have the pluck to rough it in the steerage of a big ocean liner. I took the bet and won it. If it hadn't been for seeing you I should have gone west almost at once after landing in New York, but I had seen you, so I stayed. Luckily for me I'd met Miss Woodburn often in San Francisco and once here. She recognized me in my steerage get up and was the only one who did, but her tact kept her from spoiling sport. She guessed there must be a game on and said not a word to any one. She wouldn't, even if I hadn't managed to send her a note, which I did. I had a conversation with her on board, too, the day before getting in and—we talked about you. Even then I felt sure you couldn't be the sort of girl to care about money, but"—

"It was partly my fault, Betty," Sally broke in when he paused. "To be quite, quite frank, I knew that the duchess had fallen in with some ideas of Katherine's, and I couldn't tell how far your bringing up mightn't have influenced your nature, so I encouraged Mr. Harborough to test you by keeping up the story that he was a poor young fellow named Jim Brett. It handicapped him and kept him away from you, but you were interested in him to start with, and I did my best to keep up the romance. I thought he wouldn't lose by it in the end, and he hasn't. There was the morning in the park; I managed that, and I got Katherine to send him an invitation to her big party. He was playing a waiting game, because he wanted you to care in spite of every drawback, or else he wouldn't want you to care at all, and then, before he was ready for any coup, fate stepped in and did the rest."

"In the best way it could have been done, I think," said Jim. "Now, little girl, do you understand, and have you forgiven me?"

"I'd like to think you could have trusted me from the very first, without playing at all," I answered. "Still—it is romantic, isn't it? And, besides, even if I were very angry, I—I'm afraid I'd forgive you anything after seeing you ride that horse."

"I'm hanged if I couldn't, too," said Stan. And, laughing, the two shook hands.

"What about the duchess?" asked Sally.

"Oh, when I tell her that Betty's engaged to marry a chap I've met and liked in town—a thorough sportsman, too—it will be all right," said Stan.

I was glad he didn't refer to Jim's money, even though that is the thing which will appeal most to mother. As for me, I am almost sorry he isn't poor, if there's room in my heart to be sorry about anything. But I don't believe there is. It's such a beautiful world, and I shall have two homes in it now; one on each side of the water.

LENTEN RECIPES.

Ways of Serving Fish During the Penitential Season.

Fish Omelet.—Take the remains of cold boiled whitefish, four eggs, a little white sauce, a tablespoonful of milk or cream, one ounce and a half of butter and a dash of pepper, salt and cayenne. Now free the fish from all skin and bones, break it into small flakes, melt a piece of butter in a small stewpan, add the fish seasonings and enough white sauce to moisten the fish. Keep it hot, slightly beat the eggs in a basin and add the milk and season to taste. Melt a full ounce of butter in an omelet pan, pour in the eggs, stir over a hot fire until the mixture begins to set, then shake well. Shape it in an oval form, put the prepared fish in the middle and fold in the ends. Allow it to color and then turn out on a hot dish and serve immediately.

Baked Mackerel.—After filleting the fish cut each piece in two, season with pepper, salt and lemon juice and arrange on a buttered dish in this fashion—first a piece of fish, then a slice of tomato and so until all the ingredients are used. Pour over a little stock, cover with a buttered paper and cook in the oven for twenty minutes. Dish up, mix with the stock in which the fish was cooked a little brown sauce, boil up and finally stir in a good sized piece of butter. Pour the sauce over the fish and serve.

Cod a l'Espagnole.—Slice a Spanish onion and fry it in oil, then add double its weight of cooked flaked cod, previously freed from skin and bone, and sufficient tomato sauce to moisten it all, seasoning it with salt, coralline pepper and minced sweet herbs. Now stir it all over the fire till thoroughly hot, and serve.

Baked Halibut.—Get as much halibut as you require and cut it in thick slices, thicker than you would for frying. Sprinkle a small baking pan with pepper and salt, lay in the fish, sprinkle with pepper and salt. Pour in milk to come to the top of the fish. Bake in a good oven about half an hour, then remove the fish to a hot platter, add more milk if necessary for a gravy and thicken with flour. Season to taste and pour over the fish. Another way to cook halibut is to make about one and one-half cups of butter gravy. Have it rather thick, as the juice from the fish thins it considerably. Put a pound of sliced halibut in a pudding dish, cover it with gravy, cover the dish and bake half an hour.

Camel's hair and red sable brushes that have got out of shape or curled can be restored to their proper form by dipping first into hot and then into cold water.

To make individual chicken pies line gem pans with pastry, leaving crust enough to fold over a tablespoonful rich chicken hash, and bake in a quick oven.

If brooms are to sweep clean they must be washed occasionally and freed from dust and dirt. To two quarts of warm water add four tablespoonfuls of household ammonia. Stand the brooms in this for half an hour. Rinse in cold water and hang in the sun to dry. House brushes of any variety may be washed in this manner.

An Innovation In Gloves.

The gloveless muff, which has proved such a success during the winter, will be surpassed by an even greater novelty this spring, the bracelet glove. Smart women are ordering gloves with these bracelets attached, and the illustration shows an armlet of turquoise set in gold and another design with coral insets. Some of the new silk gloves for summer have pretty bracelets embroidered in flower designs at the wrists.

THE BRACELET GLOVE.

When Placing Sleeves.

A good rule to follow when determining the proper position of sleeves when placing them in a blouse is to fold the sleeve along the forward seam and crease it at the top of the fold at the opposite side.

This crease marks the point of the sleeve that is to be sewed to the shoulder seam.

After this measure one inch back of the shoulder seam and crease the blouse at a point exactly opposite.

On this crease the forward seam of the sleeve is pinned. It is then an easy matter to baste in the under part of the sleeve and, gathering the upper part of the sleeve, baste that in even with the edge of the armhole.

DOCTORS AFRAID TO OPERATE

Could Not Remove Stone From The Bladder. Gin Pills Enabled Him To Pass It.

JOLIETTE, P. Q.

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone In The Bladder. He decided on an operation and was assisted by another doctor. They said the calculus was larger than a bean and too hard to crush, and that they could not take it out.

I returned home suffering greatly, and did not know what to do, but was recommended by a friend to try GIN PILLS. I bought a box and found relief from the pain at once. I took a second and third box of GIN PILLS after which I went back to the specialist.

THEY COULD DO NOTHING FOR HIM

He told me the calculus was reduced in size, still he could not relieve me of it, although he tried for two and a half hours.

I returned home and continued to take GIN PILLS as they reduced the pain very much, but I did not expect they would relieve me of the stone, but to my great joy, I passed the stone on October 3rd, and am now a well man and very happy.

I am sending the stone to you so that you can see for yourself what a great work GIN PILLS did for me. GIN PILLS are the best medicine in the world and because they did so much for me, I will recommend them all the rest of my life".

J. ALBERT LESSARD.

Isn't it wonderful? Just think of these simple pills, that even children can take, being able to perform what the greatest specialists in Canada could not do. Surely, the days of the miracle have not passed away, as long as we have Gin Pills. These wonderful pills dissolve stone in the bladder or kidneys because they are a natural solvent for uric acid, which causes calculus. If GIN PILLS are not sold in your neighborhood, send us 50c. for a box or $2.50 for 6 boxes. Sample free if you write us mentioning this paper. National Drug and Chemical Co. of Canada Limited, Dept. VIVID TALE OF DISASTER

Major Peuchen, the One Male Survivor from Canada

CHARGES CARELESSNESS

Captain and Crew, He Says, Were Open to Censure----Hundreds of Men Died Like Heroes

The mystery which has shrouded the last hours of the famous Canadians who went down to their doom with the ill-fated liner Titanic, was penetrated when Major Arthur Peuchen, of the Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto, and president of the Standard Chemical company, related the story of his own miraculous escape from the sea. Major Peuchen alone of the ten Canadian men on the Titanic has returned to tell of the last hours of his friends who perished with the ship. It was only his training as a sailor and a soldier, and his own physical agility which singled him out as the commander of the sixth lifeboat to leave the ship, and thus saved his life.

Before parting from the fast sinking Titanic, Major Peuchen spoke briefly with the late Mr. C. M. Hays, general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway. "GOODBYE, PEUCHEN, I FEEL THAT THIS SHIP WILL LAST ANOTHER EIGHT HOURS, AND BY THAT TIME WE SHALL HAVE ASSISTANCE," were the last known words of the great railway magnate.

One of the most cherished objects which Major Peuchen bore with him from the wreck, is a small piece of coarse paper, on which is scrawled the Major's sea commission. This paper stood between death and its victim, and to it Major Peuchen owes his life. It reads:

"Major Arthur Peuchen was ordered into the boat by me owing to the fact that I required a seaman, which he proved to be, as well as a brave man.

(Signed)

D. C. H. LYNTOLLIE.

"Second Officer late SS. Titanic."

This is Major Peuchen's instruction for taking over the sixth lifeboat instead of remaining on board to go to his fate with the other Canadians who were his associates.

Major Peuchen gained his seafaring knowledge as the skipper of the yacht Vireda, which he sailed in Toronto for six years. With him also sailed the late Mr. Hugo Ross, of Winnipeg, one of the Titanic's Canadian victims.

The Major told his story on his arrival at the Waldorf Hotel, surrounded by his two children and wife, and his brother-in-law, Mr. Wm. Thompson, of Orillia, Ontario.

Major Peuchen's Story

"It was Sunday evening, a starry night, and calm," he said "There was an exceptional bill-of-fare on for evening dinner. We were all in evening dress, and, probably the ladies with many a jewel. Music went on as usual. I dined with Mr. Markland Molson, Mr. and Mrs. Allison, and their little girl. Everything was exceptionally bright. Then I went to the smoking room and met Mr. Beattie, a partner of Mr. Hugo Ross of Winnipeg, formerly of Toronto. I also met Mr. McCarthy, of the Union Bank, of Vancouver, and a financial man from Toronto. Tlk was unusually bright. This was about at eleven o'clock. Then I said, 'Good-night, I am going to turn in.' I had just reached my berth when I heard a dull thud. It was not like a collision, and I didn't think it serious. That's extraordinary I thought, and went up to see. I ran upstairs, and, on the way, met a friend who laughingly said that we had struck an iceberg and we went upon deck.

"There we found that we had struck aft of the bow, about seventy-five feet from the point, and had scraped along the starboard side. It must either have shifted the keel or ripped open the side for we began to take in water along the whole length of the boat. The bulkheads were,

JOSEPH BRUCE ISMAY

Managing Director of the White Star Line who was saved.

therefore, no use. I went on deck and saw the ice falling on us. The berg was about 70 ft. high. Our boat itself was seven decks high, and the berg was even with the upper deck. As the berg passed the portholes it alarmed the women in the berths. The passengers came on deck, one by one, some in pyjamas, some in evening gowns. They were not yet much alarmed. I went inside and spoke with my friend Molson. Mr. Hugo Ross was sick in bed. Then I got in touch with Mr. Chas. M. Hays and Mr. Thornton Davidson, son-in-law of Mr. Hays. Then, four of us, Mr. Hays, Mr. Molson, and Mr. Davidson, went up to see the ice.

Saw She Was Listing

"I, then, for the first time, saw she was listing. This was about fifteen minutes after the strike. 'My, she is listing,' I said. Then I noticed that all the people were putting on lifebelts, and, for the first time, it looked serious. I wouldn't believe it, however, knowing that the Titanic was such a safe boat. Finally, I realized the seriousness of the thing, to have to put on life-preservers at midnight, far out in midocean. I went inside, threw off my dress suit, put on my warmest clothes, and my steward, a very nice fellow helped me put on my life preserver. I never saw him again.

"I took three oranges and a pearl pin. There was $200,000 worth of stocks and bonds, all my jewelry, and presents for my daughter Jessie and family in the berth, but I didn't touch them.

"It was rather sad to turn and leave the cheery room I had occupied cosy, large and comfortable as it was. When I got outside, all the people lined up with life preservers in the companionway made matters look very serious.

"Prior to this I went to warn Mr. Ross who was ill in bed. I met Mr. Beattie, and he went in and warned Mr. Ross. On the top deck, all mounted, all the boats were swung out ready for action. Just at that moment a mob of stokers swarmed up to the decks. The first officer, a big burly fellow, drove them back. Then I found they were shorthanded and I assisted, I helped cut off all the cords on the first lifeboat, and to take out the sail. Then I assisted in putting the ladies in the boats and the officers stood nearby, we filled the first boat and lowered it. The women kissed their husbands good-bye, the husbands assisted their wives to the boats, and then stood back like any other men.

Wives Stayed With Husbands

"We then lowered the second boat. When the wife refused to go without the husband, the wife had to stand by, the same rule prevailed with a mother and a daughter. The officer on the starboard side was lenient, and there it was that many men got in. The officer on the port side was very severe, and would allow none but women and children to enter the boats.

"The boats were not filled to capacity. One boat had only 23 in it but its capacity was 60. The officer replied to my query over this condition that the boat chains would not hold the heavy load of a full boat. The capacity of 60 could only be had when the lifeboat was on the water.

"Every woman who cared to go was taken off. There was no necessity for any woman being left behind. Finally we came to the sixth boat. The quartermaster let the boat down part-way. Then he said: "We have only one seaman in the boat, we want three or four more seamen.'

"I then went forward and said: 'I am a yachtsman and can handle a boat with any man.'

"He told me to go below and get into the lifeboat from the lower deck.

"But I said I will jump for it. Taking hold of a halyard I swung out into space. Luckily I caught my feet against the block and lowered myself to the boat, a distance of four and a half decks, probably 60 feet, down a rope into the darkness. I tell you it required nerve."

"Did you land on anyone?" asked Major Peuchen's daughter, Jessie.

Saw Lights Going Out

"No, I didn't," he replied. "I ran forward into the boat and ordered the seaman to put the plug into the boat. They had neglected to do this. He came back and said: "This boat is going to founder,' referring to the Titanic.

"We rowed away like good fellows. At last I saw there was no hope. The decks were disappearing tier by tier into the sea as the lights on each deck went out. The Titanic was doomed. Just before I left the deck Hays was the last man I saw. He came up and said. 'Peuchen, good-bye. This boat is good for eight hours yet. By that time we shall have help and the boats will be able to unload and come back for more passengers. I have it from one of the best seamen on this ship that she can't sink. I am with Mr. Crosby, of Milwaukee, a boat-builder, who says she can't sink.' Then as we left we let off the first rockets. Elsewhere everything was quiet. The steerage was nowhere in evidence.

"I knew the boat was doomed. When I got down on the level I saw her serious position. She was sinking bow first. Then we began to row, without compass, without light, but with a little food and water. Our sailor in charge had also got at some brandy and was incapable. So we had no provisions. Number 13 was said to have no food or water on board. After we had rowed three-quarters of an hour towards a certain light, which this fool of ours thought was a vessel, he wanted to know if we thought it was a buoy. Then he called it a fishing smack but it proved to be the Northern Lights. He was the most stupid man I ever saw. He kept calling out this and that, and making incoherent remarks.

"I said, 'Why don't you help us to row?' but he became indignant, and replied: 'I am in control of this boat,' with a great show of anger.

"Then we heard an awful sound and a loud report boomed over the icy sea like an explosion. It was said that the tremndous weight of the Titanic going down by the nose caused an air pressure in the center amidships, and she broke in two, and foundered.

"Never have I heard such awful cries and shrieks. People came tumbling down like so many oranges. Chain ropes, furniture, and human beings were hurled in a terrible jumble into the seas, as if rolling down a steep hill. During the whole time, the orchestra continued to play. First they played ragtime, then other tunes, and finally as they sank beneath the waves, the strains of 'Nearer My God, to Thee,' were wafted to us, until the waves closed over the heads of the gallant musicians. Only four persons werd saved at the last.

of London, a Titanic passenger who was drowned.

"In the morning the steamer went back over the scene of the disaster, but we did not see one person, nor a single corpse. There were in all sixteen lifeboats, two emergency boats, and two canvas decked rafts, making twenty. Two were filled with water and sank, and about thirteen came to our big boat, the Carpathia.

"All alone we were on the barren sea. We yelled at intervals. Then all at once we saw the headlights of this steamer. The boat sank about two hours from the time she first struck the berg. My mind is that she struck at 12.30 and went down at 2.30.

I rowed from four o'clock until eight, when we reached a steamer That ship was the gladdest sight I ever saw. We were about the last to get alongside. The steamer was sixty-five miles away when she got the message. She immediately turned around and put on double stokers and made for us.

Dropped Exhausted

"Then, as the sun came up, we could see that she was a big steamer, with ladders down, ready for us to mount. I climbed up on deck, and dropped there, exhausted. They took off my life preserver, and put a blanket around me. I took a big black coffee and a brandy. They were kindness itself. Nothing could exceed the attention paid us by crew and passengers.

"Then came the sad part of it all, I had ten personal friends, Canadians on the Titanic. I began the search for them, and I saw Mrs. Hays and the Allison's nurse and baby. I went to look for Hugo Ross, Mr. Hays, Mr. Davidson, and Mr. Molson, But I was the only Canadian man on that boat I kept going around the deck, but couldn't find them. One of the most ghastly things of all was to see one of the collapsible boats come in with a number of corpses. The boat overweighted with passengers, sank below the water level, and one by one as the victims exhausted sank into the water they were drowned and their corpses floated away. It was a ghastly sight. The boats arrived with the dead and living. Some of the boats we took aboard and some we let go with the bodies still in them.

"We then started to steam away and another vessel had come up an hour or so before we left. She was the Californian, and she cruised around to seek the survivors, in hope that some were still alive.

"In my stateroom were three men who had jumped overboard, two Englishmen and an American. They said good-bye to those on deck, and then jumped. They swam to the raft and got aboard very quietly. The passengers on the raft were firemen and stokers, and the Englishmen feared they would not be permitted to board her. 'We were early to arrive,' they said. For after that they threw every one off who reached the raft. It was a case of every man for himself. We saved 200 of the crew, which was far too high a percentage. On the Carpathia there was a saddened crowd. Every woman had lost a husband, or father, or a brother. A great majority were widows. They were clad in evening dress, in night clothes, and in any garments they had hastily found. They presented a pitiable sight. Major Peuchen now ventured a criticism of the Titanic's management. He considered that the accident was inexcusable.

"If ordinary caution or good seamanship had been used," he stated, "the accident would not have occurred. The Titanic was a good boat, luxuriously fitted up, and I have never seen anything to compare with her.

Wouldn't Slow Down for 'Bergs.

"When I got on at Southampton, I was pleased with her. But when I heard that our captain was Captain Smith, my heart rose in my mouth. Surely we are not going to have that man," I said. "An hour after sailing we got into a needless tangle with several other boats. We had a scratch crew on the Titanic, who knew little about the business. The weather changed suddenly, 30 degrees, on Sunday, from 6 to 11.30 o'clock. The officers stated that they had received wireless messages, telling of icebergs. Ismay, also, is said to have shown to Miss Ryerson a message regarding icebergs. 'We will slow down then,' said she. 'No, I guess not,' Ismay is reported to have said.

"At seven o'clock on the night of the accident the captain went to a dinner party in full dress and stayed until nine or ten-thirty, and I am at a loss to understand why a captain with 3,000 souls in his care and his ship approaching icebergs, should dine in a restaurant in that way.

"It was a calm night, and we could have seen icebergs on all hands if we had had a searchlight. We did not have a searchlight, but if we had, it would have averted the accident. We still ran at a rate of about twenty-five miles an hour, an excessively high rate of speed. We did not even slow up, and they did not put on any additional watches. I asked the officer afterwards as to the reason for this omission, but they would not answer.

"The man who rowed next to me in the lifeboat was the man on the crow's nest when the vessel struck. He said he had rung three bells on first seeing the iceberg, but had received no answer from the bridge.

"There was also no means taken to show passengers how to enter the lifeboats. The crew was inexperienced.'

Major Peuchen described Mr. Ismay's escape as follows:

"Ismay was on deck helping people into the boats. As the last boat come they ordered all the men away from it They had also ordered oher people out of the same boat. I claim that the boats were highly insufficient in numbers, and that they were not properly filled or manned.

How Canadians Died

"When I last saw Mr. Markland Molson he wore his big coat, and was cheerful," commented Major Peuchen. "I shall never forget the expression on the face of Mrs. Allison. Two men led her up to the other side of the boat where Mr. Allison was. He had to be wakened twice, as he would not believe that there was any danger. She put the baby and nurse into a boat. The story of her death is cruelly tragic. She was on a raft which was patrially submerged with its load. She held on to a man's leg, but gradually her hold loosened, and she fell into the water covering the raft, and was drowned. Her body floated across the waves to join those of her husband and her child.

"We took up a subscription of about $3,000 on the Carpathia, which will go to the gallant sailors on that vessel and to the needy survivors. We shall also give a loving cup to the captain and officers.

Major Peuchen stated that the screams of Mrs. J. J. Astor alarmed the whole boat when she heard that she must put on a life preserver. The passengers were sleeping at the time, but the awful cries of fear roused ten sleepers to the reality of their danger who it was erroneously reported was on the Titanic with her husband.

Perfet Behavior

Mrs. Dickinson Bishop, of Detriot said: "I was the first women in the first boat. I was in bed at the time the crash came. I got up and dressed and went back to bed on being assured that there was no danger There were very few passengers on the deck when I came up. There was little or no panic. The behavior of the crew was perfect."

"It seemed to me that the discipline on board the boat was wonderful," said E. T. Taylor of Philadelphia.

TORTURED FOR THIRTY FIVE YEARS

I really could not live without "Fruit-a-tives"

FENAGHVALE, ONT., Jan. 29th. 1910.

"For thirty-five years (and I am now a man over seventy) I have been a terrible sufferer from Constipation. No matter what remedy or physicians I employed, the result was always the same—impossible to get a cure. About two years ago, I read about 'Fruit-a-tives' and I decided to try them.

I have used 'Fruit-a-tives' ever since. They are the first and only medicine that suited my case. If it were not for 'Fruit-a-tives' I am satisfied that I could not live" JAMES PROUDFOOT.

OVER-WORKED KIDNEYS

Cause, Rush of Blood, Fullness, Dizziness.

J. T. Chetland, the well-known railway engineer of Hamilton, found the strain always resting upon men of his occupation vastly intensified by a tendency of the blood to rush to his head, and often at times when clearness of vision and great steadiness were demanded. Finding some difficulty in bending—a stiffness with pain having settled in his back, it occurred to him that his kidneys might be at fault. "This was a happy idea, for by it I not only got rid of the pain but many other troubles as well. I took a full dose of Dr. Hamilton's Pills and was glad to note that some obstruction of the kidneys, which I had lately noticed, was at once relieved. The flushed appearance of my face gave way to a more rational color and there was a perceptible improvement in my appetite. Dr. Hamilton's Pills certainly act splendidly upon the blood, removing heat and fulness and that sort of dizziness that makes a man at the throttle wish when it siezes him that he were elsewhere."

No medicine gives such unquestionably good results for stomach, liver, and blood troubles as Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they are mild, certain, and always curative. Refuse any substitute. All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c per box, or The Catarrhozone Co. Kingston, Ont.

OPERATOR BRIDE SAYS HIS CHIEF DECIDED NOT TO ASK FRANKFURT FOR ASSISTANCE

Titanic Inquiry is Adjourned in New York—White Star Officers to Appear.

New York, April 22.—With dramatic suddenness the Senate investigation of the Titanic came to an end Saturday, so far as the New York hearing was concerned. It will be resumed, however, in Washington to-day, when J. Bruce Ismay and P. A. S Franklin, the chief officers of the White Star Line, and more than a score of the officers and crew of the sunken vessel will appear before the committee. Incident to the sudden close of the hearing here was the story of Harold S. Bride, the second and only surviving wireless operator of the Titanic. His tale was one of suffering and of death. He told of the final plunge of the vessel to its ocean burial. Its captain's end was also revealed. He leaped from the bridge when the waters were closing over his ship.

The hearing was abandoned without any explanation from the committee as to why it was transferred to Washington. It was intimated, however, that the power of the Senate on Federal territory would be undisputed in getting at the real facts, and no question of state rights would arise to interfere. Throughout the hearing, also, officials of the White Star Line had portaryed the dangers of sailors' boarding-houses in New York as a reason why those detained by the committee should be allowed to sail on the Lapland which left Saturday.

Throughout the hearing Saturday morning Wireless Operator Bride, crippled as a result of his experience, and seated in an invalid's chair, told his story of the last moments of the Titanic. His narrative, drawn from him piecemeal by the shrewd questioning of Senator Smith of Michigan, chairman of the committee, held enthralled the committee and the audience. When his ordeal ended he was almost on the verge of collapse.

After the hearing was resumed in the afternoon, announcement of the change of base in the committee's plans was made. Herbert J. Pittman, the third officer of the Tianic, had been called to the witness chair and sworn. Senator Smith directed one question to him, relating to the whereabouts of the ship's log. The witness said he did not know.

Promptly Mr. Smith announced the committee's decision to resume the investigation in Washington to-day.

The committee devoted its entire day to an investigation of the connection of the wireless with the disaster. H. T. Cottam, the operator on the Carpathia, was the first witness. Senator Smith sought to establish certain testimony he had given on the stand Friday, and this was soon ended. Then came the "star" witness of the day.

Seated in an invalid's chair, Bride was wheeled to the end of a long table at which the committee sat. He was hollow-cheeked and wane and had just come from a physician's care. His hands were never quiet and he locked and interlocked his fingers incessantly. Like Cottam, who is 23 years old, Bride is merely a boy, a year younger than Cottam. Neither had any telegraphic experience previous to taking up wireless telegraphy, and both told tales of long hours at low wages and days and nights spent without sleep.

This inexperience and the mental condition of the young operators were the two points on which Senator Smith bore persistently. He had put Cottam through a gruelling examination, in which the youth testified that he had not slept more than eight or ten hours between Sunday night when the Titanic called for help and Thursday night when the vessel docked here with its load of unnerved men and hysterical women. Bride's story was one that bore out virtually all that Cottam's had established, except that his was one of nervous strain and worry and high-keyed suspense.

Bride was closely questioned as to the first call for aid sent out by the Titanic. He said the first vessel to answer was the Frankfurt of the North German Lloyd Line. The operator on the Frankfurt, according to the witness, apparently considered the call more or less trivial, for half an hour after the imperative appeal of the sea, he called the Titanic to inquire specifically what was wrong.

"Mr. Phillips said he was a fool," Bride testified, referring to the chief operator on the Titanic, who lost his life, "and told him to keep out."

By "keeping out," Bride declared, "Phillips meant that the Frankfurt should not keep its wireless going, but should leave the trackless realm of the air free for the Titanic's call. No effort was made to re-establish communication with the Frankfurt, although Phillips felt certain that the vessel was much nearer than the Carpathia, with which communication had been established. "This," Bride said, "Phillips judged by reason of the greater power of the 'Hertzian waves'."

Senator Smith expressed astonishment at the statement. He repeatedly pressed the witness to answer why the aid of a vessel many miles nearer a sinking ship was not invoked. Bride evaded a direct answer by saying he did not know; that probably the Frankfurt's operator could not understand, and that Phillips, his superior, had used his own judgment.

READY FOR AN INVASION

United States Forces Preparing to March on Mexico City.

Washington, April 22.—As a result of conferences between President Taft and leading members of both Houses it is understood that the President will shortly send a special message to Congress on the relations between the United States and Mexico, and the conditions existing in the latter country may require immediate action by the United States.

To this message Congress will reply by placing a large amount of money, probably $50,000,000, at the disposal of the President. A large part of this sum will be used at once in the purchase of transports and colliers, the conversion of cruisers, the acquiring and caring for of commissary supplies, fodder, horses, mules, wagons, etc. All these have been contracted for and the War Department believes that they can be delivered within a few weeks' time.

It was stated at the Department on Saturday afternoon that satisfactory arrangements have been made with railway and steamship companies for emergency service at any time and that many vessels engaged in coasting trade would be used as transports.

This appropriation of money may be followed almost immediately by a joint resolution of Congress authorizing the President to take all necessary steps for the protection of American citizens and their property in Mexico and for that purpose to employ the land and naval forces of the United States. No formal declaration of war will be made unless there is resistance to the invasion.

The present intention of the War Department is to send two armies toward the City of Mexico, one starting at the Rio Grande, and the other from the seaboard. Thirty thousand regulars will be available at once and fifty thousand volunteers will be called for. The latter will come from the militia, transferred from state to federal control. Two armies aggregating eighty thousand men appear to be a small order for the successful invasion of a country numbering 15,000,000 people, and some army officers believe that 500,000 men will be required. But in this connection it is recalled that in the former war with Mexico Gen. Taylor crossed the Rio Grande with only five thousand men, and that Gen. Scott made his way without serious opposition along the historic path of Cortez from Vera Cruz to the capital.

At the present juncture the United States seems to be, for the first time in her history, in a happy position of having made some preparation for trouble before it came. During the past year Mexico has been thoroughly mapped, the transportation thoroughly studied and every important mountain pass located and charted.

TEDDY LEADS IN NEBRASKA BY BIG MARGIN

Lincoln, Neb., April 22.—With indications that Col. Roosevelt has a big margin over President Taft; that Lafollette is running ahead of the President as the choice of the Republicans, and that Speaker Clark is the Democratic choice, the count of the votes at Friday's meeting proceeded slowly Saturday. The Roosevelt management say the colonel has a majority of at least 20,000.

Omaha and the eastern counties where the Democratic revolt against Bryan was strongest, gave Harmon a big vote, but Clark is running so far ahead in the rural districts and in the interior that the Speaker's victory is assured by an apparent margin of 5,000 to 6,000. The contest between Wilson and Harmon is close.

Every Congressional district in the state has gone for Roosevelt, giving him a solid delegation from Nebraska of sixteen votes. The complete count in the second district, "Omaha," may give Harmon two votes, but the fourteen others will be for Clark.

CARPENTER FALLS THIRTY FEET

Toronto, April 22.—As the result of a thirty-foot fall from a scaffold on Saturday morning John Pearson of 60 Garden avenue lies in St. Michael's Hospital suffering from a broken leg and a fractured rib.

Pearson, who for the past ten years has been employed as a carpenter by J. J. Walsh, a building contractor, was working on a building being erected at 94 Tyndal avenue. He was standing on a scaffold thirty feet from the ground, which he, together with another carpenter, had erected, when shortly after 11 o'clock the board on which he was standing gave way and let him fall. The injured man is 64 years of age and married.

SLOW SPEED SAVED THE CORSICAN

Chicago, April 22.—Stories of how the Atlantic liner Corsican, which docked at St. John's, N.B., last Monday morning, after crashing into an iceberg, escaped disaster similar to that which overwhelmed the steamship Titanic, were told here Saturday by a party of British immigrants who passed through Chicago bound for Idaho.

The Corsican encountered a field of ice Thursday, April 11. The captain immediately gave orders for the vessel to slow down and for three days steamed less than five knots an hour. The Corsican picked its way through the perilous ice, finally reaching port with all on board safe.

Early on Friday morning, April 12, the steamship crashed into a monster berg, but the slow rate at which the vessel was proceeding saved the boat from serious damage. The crash caused excitement among the passengers who remained on deck for two days, until the steamship had safely passed through the field of ice.

TWO KILLED IN RAILWAY WRECK

Light Engine Crashed Into Rear End of Cattle Train.

Georgetown, April 22.—Speeding beyond control on a down-grade, a light engine in charge of Fred. Gorley of Stratford and James Lawson, fireman, crashed into the rear car of a cattle train early yesterday morning. Brakeman Corey was killed instantly, and Thomas Currah was burned to death in the flames which made the rear-end cattle car a roaring furnace in a few moments. Fellow-drovers who escaped made desperate efforts to tear away the wreckage and rescue Currah, whose shouts for help were plainly heard, but the men were driven back by the smoke and fire.

Currah and the brakeman appear to have been the only men in the rear-end car of the cattle train in which there were 45 cars. Those who escaped with no injuries beyond a severe shaking up were: S. C. Delt, Palmerston, conductor of the cattle train, and A. McKinley, Forest; W. J. Taylor, Varna; Benjamin Hodgins, Lucan; George Wynn, Wingham; J. Barr, Brussels, and James Heffron, Blyth, all drovers.

The accident occurred about 6.15 a.m., when the cattle train was pulling into the yards at the junction of the Grand Trunk and the old Northern line. The train was drawn by a large "double-header" engine, but to aid it in climbing an up-grade, the light engine had been used to shove behind.

This engine was uncoupled and when the descent on the other side began, it apparently got beyond control of the engineer and crashed into the rear end of the train at a high rate of speed.

Currah, who was a middle-aged married man, was taking his car of cattle from Bright to Corbett & Hall, Toronto. Three of the cattle were killed by the collision but the others, about fifteen in number, were taken out unharmed.

The wreck blocked the main line for several hours, delaying the Grand Trunk Chicago train. The damage to the engine was not great.

Currah's son and two brothers arrived yesterday afternoon and took charge of the remains. Both bodies were badly charred.

Coroner McCall of Milton, who, with Crown Attorney Dick, visited the scene yesterday, will open an inquest to-day.

Fire In Cork Factory.

Port Colborne, April 22.—The Robinson Bros.' cork works was partially destroyed by fire Sunday morning. A watchman discovered the interior portion of the north end of the factory in a blaze about 4 a.m. and summoned all the help near by to fight the fire. About six thousand square feet of cork boards, the machinery and belting was completely destroyed. It is not known how the fire originated.

BODIES SAID TO BE FOUND

St. John's, Nfld., April 22.—Sixty-four bodies have been recovered by the cable steamer Mackay-Bennett, which has been searching the vicinity of the Titanic disaster, according to a report that reached this city last night. It is said a number of bodies which were recovered were sunk again, as they were without identification marks. The names of those identified could not be obtained through the Cape Race wireless station.

The sixty-four bodies recovered are regarded as identifiable, according to the report. Those that were sunk were presumably in a condition making their preservation impossible.

Rumors In Halifax.

Halifax, April 22.—The cable ship Mackay-Bennett must have been cruising at the scene of the Titanic foundering for twenty-four hours now in search of bodies, but no word has been received from her, except that it was learned that a steamer proceeding westward had seen bodies floating at sea and notified the Mackay-Bennett, which immediately proceeded to the locality indicated. There had been rumors that bodies were found; one of these being that of Captain Smith. The Mackay-Bennett sailed with orders to report, her period of search being left indefinite.

The cable ship's instructions were to report first to New York and then to Halifax. The White Star agents said last night that nothing had come.

The Empress of Ireland sailed Saturday night at seven o'clock for Liverpool and by 6 o'clock this morning would be in the waters where the Titanic went down. It is likely the Ireland will speak with the Mackay-Bennett.

DID NOT URGE CAPTAIN SMITH TO INCREASE THE SPEED OF THE TITANIC

Bruce Ismay Says He Left the Ship Only After Decks Were Clear.

New York, April 22.—In a statement given out last night, J. Bruce Ismay replies to various published statements regarding the Titanic disaster, particularly those in which his name has prominently figured.

"When I appeared before the Senate committee," the statement reads, "I understood the purport of the enquiry was to ascertain the cause of the sinking of the Titanic, with a view to determining whether additional legislation was required to prevent the recurrence of so horrible a disaster.

"I welcomed such an enquiry and appeared voluntarily without subpoena and answered all questions to the best of my ability with complete frankness and without reserve. I did not suppose the question of my personal conduct was the subject of the enquiry, although I was ready to tell everything I did on the night of the collision.

"As I have been subpoenaed to attend before the committee in Washington to-morrow, I should prefer to make no statement out of respect for the committee, but I do not think that courtesy requires me to be silent in the face of the untrue statements made in some of the newspapers.

"When I went on board the Titanic at Southampton it was my intention to return by her. I had no intention of remainining in the U. S. at that time. I came merely to observe the new vessel, as I have done in other cases of this character. On the voyage I was a passenger and exercised no greater rights nor privileges than any other passenger. I was not consulted by the commander about the ship, her course, speed, navigation or her conduct at sea. I saw Captain Smith only casually, as other passengers did; I was never in his room; I was never on the bridge until after the accident; I did not sit at his table in the saloon; I had not visited the engine-room nor gone through the ship, and did not go, or attempt to go to any part of the ship to which any other first cabin passenger did not have access.

"It is absolutely and unqualifiedly false that I ever said that I wished the Titanic should make a speed record or should increase her daily runs. I deny absolutely having said to any person that we would increase our speed in order to get out of the ice zone.

"The story that the White Star Line would receive an additional sum by way of bounty, or otherwise, for attaining a certain speed, is untrue. The White Star Line receives from the British Government a fixed compensation of $350,000 per annum for carrying the mails, without regard to the speed of any of its vessels, and no additional sum is paid."

Mr. Ismay goes on to tell how he got away from the ship.

"I worked at the starboard boats helping women and children into the boats and lowering them over the side. I did nothing with regard to the boats on the port side. By that time every wooden lifeboat on the starboard side had been lowered away, and I found that they were engaged in getting out the forward collapsible boat on the starboard side. I assisted in this work, and all the women that were on this deck were helped into the boat. They were all, I think, third-class passengers.

"As the boat was going over the side, Mr. Carter, a passenger, and myself got in. At that time there was not a woman on the boat deck, nor any passenger of any class, so far as we could see or hear. There had been 35 and 40 in it, I should think, most of them women."

TWO HUNDRED ARE DROWNED

Jackson, Miss., April 22.—Reports reached here Saturday that 200 persons have been drowned in Bolivar County, Miss., by the flood that swept through that section when the river dykes broke near Beulah, Bolivar County. Bolivar County is covered with water and efforts to verify the report are meeting with many obstacles.

Reports declare most of the persons swept away by the deluge were negroes, who failed to reach high ground in time to get out of the flood's path. Governor Brewer was advised yesterday there are 6,000 refugees in camp at Cleveland and that the food supply will last less than 24 hours.

To Govern Ocean Liners.

Washington, April 22.—The United States Senate Saturday adopted the amended maritime resolution looking to a more complete international regulation of ocean traffic.

The resolution advises the President that the Senate would favor treaties with the great maritime powers to clear and broadly govern the courses, speed, life-saving aparatus, wireless and other equipment of ocean liners, so as to avert if possible, a repetition of the Titanic catastrophe.

The Words of Harold P. Bushy, Who Was Permanently Cured of Chronic Lumbago by "Nerviline."

"Three years ago I discovered that a man subject to lumbago might just as well be dead as alive." These words open the sincere, straightforward letter of H. P. Bushy, a well-known man in the plumbing and tinsmithing business in Portland.

"One attack came after another, and lumbago got to be a chronic thing with me. I could scarcely get in a day's work before that knifing, cruel pain would attack my back. I used a gallon of liniments; not one of them seemed penetrating enough to get at the core of the pain. I read in the Montreal Witness about Nerviline, and got five bottles. It is a wonderful medicine—I could feel its soothing pain-relieving action every time it was applied. When I got the disease under control with Nerviline, I built up my strength and fortified my blood by taking Ferrozone at meals. This treatment cured me permanently, and I urge everyone to give up the thick, white, oily liniments they are using, and try an up-to-date, penetrating, pain-destroyer like Nerviline.

A Family Liniment

THE CRAZE FOR SPEED

Is there a necessity behind all the efforts made to gain speed? Railway trains are driven at their fastest rate and hurried from point to point, and steamers risk dangers to cut an hour or two off the time taken to cross the ocean. Motor cars flash across the country and electric cars rush along road and street.

The companies that own the railways and steamer lines endeavor to make time because the people who travel demand it. The business of transport that can show a saving of hours, or even minutes, is the one that secures the patronage, and as there is a demand there are efforts to meet it.

There is a continual hurry. The cry is for speed and greater speed. Life is short, but is it so short, and are interests so pressing that there need be this great pressure to save a little time? Or is the age affected by a desire for speed that is more a craze than a necessity?

Observations of the actions of people would seem to show that impatience is not always based on reason. Persons will rush across a street in front of a street car and endanger their lives to save a few seconds, and then calmly stop to chat or watch some event of little interest. People will crush their way out of an assembly when an entertainment is over, as if they had an imperative call, and when out loiter at leisure. And the same feeling demands the fastest means of travelling. Dangers are increased at the call of impatience.

There are times when business presses, but there does not appear to be a demand for speed that is unreasoning.

A SENSIBLE SUGGESTION

A suggestion made by a committee of passengers rescued from the Titanic that international action should be taken to see that necessary means are provided for life at sea, is a sensible one. The ocean steamers pass from nation to nation, and all are interested in seeing that lives are not unnecessarily endagered. The different nations have laid down differing rules for the equipment of steamers, and some of them are clearly inadequate. The vessel owners do and should know what they are required to do, and if all nations united in promulgating the laws there would be rules that would apply to all steamers sailing from or to any ocean port. The facts that such rules have been made shows that it has been recognized that the matter cannot be left to the owners, and the laws should be revised to meet the requirements, and they should be made uniform, so that the citizens of one country would know that when they took passage on the vessel of another they would be protected by the same regulations that were in force in their owen. The Hague tribunal would seem to be a body ready to hand through which the nations can act.

Even on smaller waters international rules would not be out of place. Attention has been called to the life-saving equipment that lake vessels are required to carry in Canada. The laws in this respect can easily be improved, and joint action on the part of Canada and the United States could be taken through the International Waterways Commission.

NOTE AND COMMENT

A western paper informs an enquirer that Guelph, Ontario, is named after King George. How old is Guelph?

A Toronto milkman has made a fortune. But don't jump at conclusions. He made it by selling his farm to a railway company.

Theodore Roosevelt and President Taft may yet convince the people that neither of them should be President of the United States.

The Moose Jaw Times says that reciprocity "is going to cut a large figure in the next Provincial elections." It cut quite a figure in the last Dominion elections, anyway.

"Save the ravines," cries a Toronto paper, in view of a suggestion that houses be built in the Rosedale gorge. Toronto cannot have a mountain like Montreal and Hamilton, it wants to protect its valley.

The situation in the Porcupine gold camp is generally encouraging, although four properties have closed within a month.

Major A. G. Peuchen of Toronto left for Washington to give evidence before the Senate Committee investigating the Titanic disaster.

Toronto Railway employes, at a mass meeting, decided to make many demands upon the company, and failing the granting of their requests will strike.

The Middlesex election trials will not be held until September. The North Essex petition against Hon. Dr. Reaume and the cross-petition will be tried in June.

Several villages in Beauce County, Que., have been flooded by a rise in the Chaudiere River. Traffic on part of the Quebec Central Railway has been abandoned.

Little John Magee, whose death is reported, makes the eighth of the family in Prince Edward Island who have died of poison. The Provincial Government is investigating the affair.

James Crawford of Brock street, Perth, was trimming a tree on Saturday, using a pruning knife attached to a pole and worked by a lever, when he got a shock from overhead wires which proved fatal.

EMBARRASSING.

But Presumably the Young Man Recovered His Candy.

Seated in the third row of the stalls, the young couple were enjoying themselves immensely. The newness of the young lady's clothes, the devotion of her attendant man and the huge box of chocolates they were sharing suggested that they were honeymooners.

The first act of the play had just got well under way when a stout, elderly and pompous lady swept rustlingly to her seat right in front of the bride.

At first the young couple paid no attention to her; then—

"Excuse me, madam," the bridegroom began deferentially, "but"—

The lady addressed swung slowly round and eyed him coldly. Even in the darkened theater he felt the chill of her glance. But, undeterred, he began again. This time he got a reply.

"Kindly explain why you persist in annoying me," said the stout lady haughtily. "My seat does not obscure your view of the stage, does it?"

"Not at all, madam; but, all the same, I must ask you to move. You're"—

But she would not listen.

"I am not interfering with you in any way, so please mind your own business!"

But the young husband was desperate, although his lips were trembling with laughter.

"Pardon me, madam," he persisted, "but you are sitting on an open box of chocolates!"—London Answers.

"PILLS LIKE A FYLE"

So Harsh and Drastic are Many Pills as to Seriously Injure Health.

In a letter written from his home in Valencia, Mr. Marsh Selwyn does service to thousands by drawing attention to the injuries inflicted upon delicate people by drastic purgative pills.

"For a long time I suffered from constipation. This condition compelled the use of pills. Like many another, I made the unwise choice of using pills that were like lightning in their activity. I began to be filled with intestinal disturbances, constant rumblings, gas in the bowels and diarrhoea. I grew pale and emaciated. Then the doctor told me drastic irritating pills had caused catarrh of the bowels, an almost incurable disease. Explaining my situation to a friend, he advised a trial of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I speedily experienced the healing and curative effect they exert on the stomach, liver and bowels. The intestines, freed from irritating drugs, rapidly regained natural tone, the bowels acted as if nature and not Dr. Hamilton's Pills were at work. I know it will be of value to thousands to know that a pill as mild and curative as Dr. Hamilton's is available to the ailing."

For bowel disorders, sick headache, constipation, liver and stomach derangement, there is no pill so invariably sure to cure as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Refuse a substitute. Sold in 25c boxes, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills Are Mild—Never Gripe

For Future Use.

Mother—I see you have written me a letter to say how sorry you are you took the jam. Well, I'll forgive you.

Johnny—Yes, ma, but please don't destroy the letter. It will do for next time.—New York Mail.

Lingerie Frock of Voile and Blue Chiffon.

A CHARMING SUMMER MODEL.

This pretty frock of white voile with an embroidered border is draped over a skirt of blue chiffon deeply hemmed. The cuffs, sailor collar and sash are of blue chiffon, the sash having knotted ends at the back.

Wedding Place Cards.

Dainty place cards are those painted in water colors. Some of the newest show the bride cutting the cake, and for a military wedding she can be using the sword while her adoring spouse stands by in full uniform. Often just the head of the bride is used and cut out so it stands above an oblong card of water color paper.

A pretty candy box place card is in heart shape covered with white satin with a bunch of orange blossoms on top, from which peeps a diminutive Cupid.

Another novelty is small slippers of silver paper or white satin with tiny sequin buckle. In the top is sewed a bag of thin white silk or chiffon, and the slipper is filled with candied violets or mint leaves.

Pretty basket effects in chip or white twisted paper with a border of artificial flowers can be used for entree cups or for individual salted nuts. Equally pretty for either purpose are small baskets with deep handles made of silver paper, the handle tied with orange blossoms and gauze ribbon.

The Wife Who Nags.

The worst thing that the bad fairy could wish upon a man is a nagging, faultfinding wife. The most savory of the dishes prepared by her hand tastes flat and stale if served up with the sauce of her complaints, and the coziest of homes is a place of unrest if it is the storehouse of her recriminations. Even if there is just cause for jealousy, nagging is an aggravation rather than a cure.

It breeds the spirit of antagonism, and the case of the injured party is hurt rather than helped.

The only safe cure for straying affections is to make oneself so attractive, so agreeable, that the desired love and attention are irresistibly held to their original moorings. Sometimes sudden evidence of indifference awakes the errant one to the fact that the straying may be mutual. Sometimes renewed outbursts of affection, of care and interest, is the tonic of weakened ardor. Sometimes splendid results are accomplished by wearing smart and becoming clothes and brushing up the wits and vivacity.

For the Tourist.

If you expect to go abroad pray that some one may give you one of the convenient cases known as a "Pullman apron."

This is a traveling case of pliable leather that folds into small compass and when open holds in separate compartments brush, comb, mirror, manicure scissors, nail files, wash cloth, soap box, hairpin box, tooth powder and toilet water bottles.

The bought cases are rather costly, but one is easily made at home from pliable leather or suede lined with oiled silk, with straps and pockets for all necessary toilet articles. Leave an extra piece at one end for a flap that buttons down over the double case when closed, like an envelope flap. To the upper corners sew two inch straps of leather with buckle at one end, through which the other end is slipped.

CHAPTER I.

The Hired Car.

Derby Day fell that year on the first Wednesday in June. By a whim of the British climate, the weather was fine; in fact, no rain had fallen on Southern England since the previous Sunday. Wise after the event, the newspapers published cheerful "forecasts" and certain daring "experts" discussed the probabilities of a heat wave. So London, on that bright Wednesday was agog with excitement over its annual holiday; London is the gayest and liveliest city in the world.

And then, wholly independent of the weather, there was the Great Queston.

From the hour when the first 'bus rumbled Citywards until some few minutes before three o'clock in the afternoon the mass of the people seemed to find delight in asking and answering it. The Question was ever the same; but the answer varied. In its way, the Question formed a tribute to the advance of democracy. It caused strangers to exchange opinions and pleasantries in crowded trains and omnibuses. It placed peers and commoners on an equality. During some part of the day it completely eclipsed all other topics of conversation.

Thus, young Lord Medenham made no pretense of shirking it while he stood on the steps of his father's mansion in Cavendish Square and watched his chauffeur stowing a luncheon basket beneath the front seat of the Mercury 38.

"You know a bit about racing, Tomkinson," he said, smiling at the elderly butler who had brought the basket out of the house. "What's going to win?"

"The King's horse, my lord," replied Tomkinson, with the unctuous conviction of a prelate laying down a dogma.

"Is it as sure as all that?"

"Yes, my lord."

"Well, I hope so. You are on a sovereign—By gad, you really are, you know."

Tompkinson was far too keenly alive to the monetary side of the transaction to pay heed to the quip. His portly figure curved in a superb bow.

"Thank you, my lord," said he.

"Remind me this evening if you are right. I shall not forget to condemn you if you are wrong."

Tompkinson ignored the chance of error and its consequences.

"Your lordship will be home for dinner?"

"Yes, I have no other engagement. All ready, Dale?" for the chauffeur was in his seat, and the engine was purring with the placid hum of a machine in perfect tune.

CYNTHIA

Tompkinson moved gradually down the steps, ushered Viscount Medenham into the car, and watched its graceful swoop into Holles Street.

"Times have changed," said he to himself. "Twenty years ago, when I first came here, his lordship's father would have given me a tip, and he wouldn't have been coming home for dinner, neither."

By that fatal word Tompkinson betrayed the cloven hoof. At least, he was no prelate—and his assumption of the prophetic role would soon be put to the test. But he had answered the Great Question.

The Mercury crossed Oxford Street and insinuated itself into the aristocratic narrowness of Mayfair. It stopped in Curzon Street, opposite a house gay with flowers in window-boxes. The Viscount looked at his watch.

"How far to Epsom?" he asked over Dale's shoulder.

"About sixteen miles by the direct road, my lord, but it will be best to go round by Kingston and avoid the worst of the traffic. We ought to allow an hour for the run."

"An hour!"

"We are not in France now, my lord. The police here would have spasms if they saw the car extended."

Lord Medenham sighed.

"We must reason with them," he said. "But not to-day. Lady St. Maur declares she is nervous. Of course, she doesn't know our Mercury. After to-day's experience it will be quite another matter when I take her to Brighton for lunch on Sunday."

Dale said nothing. He had met his employer at Marseilles in October, when Lord Medenham landed from Africa; during the preceding twelve months his license had been indorsed three times for exceeding the speed limit on the Brighton Road, and he had paid $40 in fines and costs to various petty sessional courts in Surrey and Sussex. Sunday, therefore, promised developments.

Medenham seemed to think that his aunt, Lady St. Maur, would be waiting him on the doorstep. As no matronly figure materialized in that locality, he alighted, and obeyed a brass-lettered injunction to "knock and ring." Then he disappeared inside the house, and remained there so long that Dale's respect for the law began to weaken. The chauffeur had been given a racing certainty for the first race; the hour was nearing twelve, and every road leading to Epsom Downs would surely be congested.

His lordship came out, alone, and it was clear that the unexpected had happened.

"Nice thing!" he said, with the closest semblance to a growl that his good-natured drawl was capable of. "The whole show is busted, Dale. Her ladyship is in bed with her annual bilious attack—comes of eating forced strawberries, she says. And she adores strawberries. So do I. There's pounds of 'em in that luncheon basket. Who's going to eat 'em?"

Dale foresaw no difficulties in that respect but he did realize at once that his master cared little about racing, and, so far as Epsom was concerned, would abandon the day's excursion without a pang. He grew desperate. But, being something of a stoic, he kept his feelings in check and played a card that could hardly fail.

"You will find plenty of youngsters on the hill who will be glad of them, my lord," said he.

"You don't tell me so! Kiddies at the Derby! Well, why not? It shows what a stranger I am in my own land that I could never have seen the blessed race. Right ahead then, Dale; we must back the King's horse and arrange a school treat. But I'll take the wheel. Can you tuck your legs over the basket? I'm not going to sit alone in the tonneau. And, who knows—we may pick up someone on the road."

Starting on the switch, the car sprang off towards Piccadilly. Dale sighed in his relief. With ordinary luck they ought to reach Epsom before one o'clock, and racing did not begin till half an hour later. He left wholly out of reckoning the mysterious element in human affairs that allots adventures to the adventurous, though close association with Viscount Medenham during the past nine months ought to have taught him the wisdom of caution. Several chapters of a very interesting book might be supplied by his lordship's motoring experiences on the Continent, and these would only supplement the still more checkered biography of one who, at the close of the Boer War, elected to shoot his way home through the Mid-African haunts of big game rather than return by orthodox troopship. On the face of things, it was absurd to imagine that a self-confessed wanderer should be permitted to see his first Derby in the sacrosanct company of a stout aunt and a well-filled luncheon basket. Even Medenham's recording angel must have smiled at the conceit, though doubtless shaking a grave head when the announcement of the Dowager's indisposition revealed the first twist from the path of good intent. As for Lady St. Maur, she declared long afterwards that the whole amazing entanglement could be traced distinctly to her fondness for the ducal fruit raised under glass. A cherry-stone lodged in the veriform appendix of an emperor has more than once played strange pranks with the map of Europe, so it is not surprising that a strawberry, subtly bestowed in a place well adapted to the exercise of its fell skill, should be able to convulse a section of the British peerage.

Be that as it may, the hap that put Medenham in control of his Mercury unquestionably led to the next turn in events. A man driving a high-powered car watches the incidents of the road more closely than the same individual lounging at ease in the back seat. Hence, his lordship's attention was caught instantly by a touring car drawn up close to the curb in Down Street. That short thoroughfare forms, as it were, a backwash for the traffic of Piccadilly. At the moment it held no other vehicle than the two automobiles, and it required no second look at the face of the driver of the motionless car to discover that something was seriously amiss. Anger and dispair struggled there for predominance. Richard the Third of England must have given just such a glance at his last horse foundered on Bosworth Field.

Medenham never passed another motorist in trouble without stopping.

"Anything the matter?" he asked, when the Mercury was halted with the ease of a trained athlete posed in suspended motion.

"Everything!"

"Count Your Blessings"

WOULD you be willing to go back to the standards of living that prevailed in 1812?

In spite of all the praise of "the good old days," would you be content to give up the many conveniences we have gained in the past century?

Former generations knew nothing of the luxuries of modern travel with its observation cars, individual lights in Pullman berths, phonograph recitals, rich appointments, home-like comforts, and special safety devices with which the modern railway system surrounds its passengers.

The rural telephone now places the farmer in instant communication with the source of the latest market reports, and saves him many hours of precious time in the event of sickness or accident.

The introduction of the typewriter and adding machine has lightened the load and lengthened the day of the business office.

It was Advertising that first proclaimed the usefulness of these devices, that created an immediate and universal demand for them, that established a world-wide distribution which made them readily accessible to us all.

McCormick invented the reaper and thereby made himself an everlasting benefactor of the farmer. But it was Advertising that carried the wonderful news with its far-reaching significance to the "man with the hoe."

You know what housework used to be. Realize what it is now, since the advent of sanitary plumbing fixtures, hot-water heating, vacuum cleaners, and electric household appliances. Advertising has brought these things into your home. It has eliminated drudgery.

Advertising is service. Science, invention, commerce, are all indebted to its aid. It has raised the standard of living, elevated business ethics, and put us within reach of more real comforts, more real blessings, than we ever enjoyed before.

Advice regarding your advertising is available through any recognized Canadian advertising agency, or the Secretary of the Canadian Press Association, Room 503 Lumsden Bldg., Toronto. Enquiry involves no obligation on your part—so write if interested.

Two persons were killed and more than a score of persons injured, several seriously, when the collapse of the floor of the Church of Our Lady of Victory precipitated nearly 300 persons in the basement of Harrington Park, N.J.

The man who is old enough to know better is usually too old to do better.

IN MEMORY OF THE DEAD

The memorial service at St. John's church last evening drew an attendance that filled every pew, while many were forced to stand at the rear, and in the vestry. The service was one that created a deep impression, and all appeared to realize the solemn import of the occasion.

About 6.45 o'clock the 57th Regimental Band took up a position in front of the S.O.E. hall, on Hunter street, where they headed an extremely large turn out of the members of the Sons of England, the St. George's Society, and quite a number of fraternal organization members. The proceeded slowly to the church, the route of their march being thronged with on-lookers. It was estimated that nearly two hundred took part in the parade. The band entered the church first, occupying the front seats, the lodge members followed, using the body of the church. Inside the edifice the band played "The Dead March in Saul" until every one was seated. The surpliced choir entered the church marching up the centre aisle of the church, the rector bringing up the rear. As they moved solemnly and slowly forward, to the measured strains of the band music, a noticeable subdued silence prevailed.

The Rector, Rev. Canon Davidson, upon entering the church immediately began the beautiful and impressive service of the church for those buried at sea.

Many of the congregation were unable to gain entrance until after seven o'clock.

In his opening prayer the rector feelingly referred to the noble motives and ingrained chivalry that had distinguished the actions of the passengers and crew on the sinking Titanic.

In the course of his sermon, the reverend gentleman pointed out some lessons amongst many others, which the disaster taught. He felt that the great public were largely answerable for the fearful catastrophe which has stirred the world so deeply. The public have said to the great ship building companies "we want speed, first, and then luxury, on your steamships." They have cried for something up-to-date in every particular, built upon scientific lines, and they would be willing to take the risk.

But the calamity just experienced will be the medium of safety for multitudes. It should furnish a lesson, that God will not countenance long, opposition to His immutable decrees.

The rector enlarged upon the almost unparalelled heroism displayed by the band on board the sinking vessel, who although knowing that death was staring them in the face, played on and on during the launching of the small boats and the sinking of the vessel. They were men who gave their lives for others. The imagination tells more of their feelings than can the printed page. The courage of those men who played to keep up the courage of those below, played ordinary secular airs, was magnificent.

The action of wireless operator Phillips was another shining piece of heroism, marking the disaster, rushing out his signals of distress in every direction, although feeling them getting weaker and weaker. He was fulfilling duty to the minute, while others were in ignorance. The rector paid a splendid tribute to every man who was performing his duty high or low, rich or poor.

The whole affair, concluded the pastor, should inspire us to be "more British," to do something worth while, and live up to the traditions of the great Empire to which we belong. The actions of the men aboard that vessel were only the outcome of the innate nobility and chivalry of the Patron Saint of England, St. George. The weaker first, is what their hearts prompted.

The service was very lengthy, ending about nine o'clock, when headed by the band, the visiting Orders, marched back to their rooms.

Judge Huycke, Mayor Bradburn, and a couple of the City Aldermen to whom special invitations had been extended to attend the memorial service at St. John's last evening, were noticed among the congregation.

TRIBULATION AN INSTRUMENT OF GOD FOR BETTERMENT OF MANKIND

In the George street Methodist church last night a memorial service was held for the victims of the wreck of the "Titanic." All the music was appropriate to the occasion, and the Rev. Isaac Couch delivered a strong sermon on "Tribulation," using the Titanic disaster as one incident in many to illustrate his teaching.

Mr. Couch described the mightiness and grandness of the lost ship, and said that it was as a rowboat or skiff when it came in contact with one of God's icebergs. He described the far-reaching effects of the disaster on business, communities, society and other institutions. He went on to show that, although this disaster was a great tribulation, that tribulation was an instrument of God for the betterment of mankind, that the mystery of suffering is the condition of the evolving of the highest excellence, and that tribulation was the best means used by God to stamp perfection on the world. There had never been a pioneer in discovery, nor a great author who had not had their Gethsemane of sorrow. In conclusion Mr. Couch said: "We will not criticize, we will believe that they did their best, and I pray that every one of us through this great calamity may be urged on to do our best."

BOAT ARRIVALS

"Megantic" of the White Star Dominion Line, sailing from Portland to Liverpool, was reported 5.0 miles West of Inthrahull, at one o'clock, Sunday morning.

"Laurentic" arrived at Halifax yesterday morning. Due Portland at noon to-day.

"Lake Erie" of the Allan Line, is reported due at St. John this evening.

PARTY OF FOUR WERE BUMPED ON WATER ST.

The silence of Sunday was broken last night about 11.30 o'clock, by the noise of a heavy farmer's wagon attached to a team of spirited horses, which seemingly had gotten beyond the control of the driver. There were in the conveyance two men and woman, and all were given a rather severe shaking up.

The horses took a course up Water street from Hunter, and narrowly missed breaking the wagon against the curb at Victoria Park. They were quieted, however, about Smith street, and the occupants of the wagon escaped without being more than painfully bruised.

REFERENCES TO THE LOSS OF THE TITANIC

In every church of the city reference was made yesterday to the ocean disaster of last week, which has caused the whole world to pause and think.

Some of the pastors used the usual time, in dealing with their subject relating to the loss of the Titanic, while others, who had arranged earlier in the week for other subjects, found time during the service to make some remarks regarding the destruction of the big liner and the death of so many of her crew and passengers.

Many lessons were drawn from the catastrophe, one being the insignificance of the works of man to the power of the Great Builder. At one service the preacher held the people had forgotten God, and just at the time when they felt secure from all danger, the hand of God descended.

THEATRICAL
"THE BARRIER"

"The Barrier," a thrilling tale of northern Alaska, was presented by a good company Saturday night at the Grand. There was only a fair house, but the play was an interesting one, dealing with the lives of the prospectors in Alaska, where the United States Government was only beginning to establish direct authority, or law and order.

Grace Johnson, as Necia, and Lee Millar as Captain Burrell had the leading roles and played them to the satisfaction of the audience. They were supported by a strong company and the whole story was accurately reproduced by those representing the real and life-like characters in Rex Beach's novel.

There will be a Meeting of the Peterboro' Automobile Association on Thursday evening, April 25th, in Bank of Montreal Chambers, and a representative from the Ontario Motor League will address the meeting. It is desired to have every automobile owner in the city present. Chas. Ackerman, Secretary.

BOYS AND CIGARETTES

In a sermon applicable to young men, Rev. G. W. Henderson, preached last evening on the evil results of youthful cigarette indulgence and immorality. He made a strong plea for boys to realize the harmful effects that would eventually ensue and how it retards their progress in the business world, besides wrecking their constitutions. If young men found that they had to smoke, better by far smoke a pipe than the deadly and poisonous cigarette.

MAJOR PEUCHEN TALKS TOO MUCH FOR "WHITE STAR"

Under the caption of when silence would be golden, the Mail and Empire publishes the following letter:

Editor of The Mail and Empire.

Sir,—In connection with the Titanic disaster, I observe from the newspapers that Major Arthur Peuchen, a Toronto citizen, has already gratuitously offered numerous adverse criticisms reflecting on the competency of the crew, and especially of the commander, of that ill-fated vessel. Major Peuchen's fellow-citizens will not think any more highly of him because, having been fortunate enough to have been rescued, he goes out of his way to defame the memory of a man who has gone to his death at the post of duty. The gallant Major seems to have declared his proficiency in nautical matters, although we are not informed as to the nature of his certificate for seamanship. These early criticisms ill become a man holding his Majesty's commission. It will be time enough for Major Peuchen to give out such statements when he is asked for them by the court of enquiry, which is about to be instituted.

Yours, etc.,
"WHITE STRA."

INSURANCE CO. HEAVY LOSERS THROUGH DISASTER

Mr. H. Cyril Hill, local representative of the Travellers' Insurance Company, received a wire at noon today, informing him that over $1,000,000 insurance risk was wiped out by the "Titanic" disaster, represented by the passenger list. This loss will exceed any previous calamity recorded.

The wire was sent out by John L. Way, vice-president of the Travellers' Insurance Company.

Mr. C. M. Hays, the late Grand Trunk, president, carried a heavy risk himself.

Mr. Hill was personally well acquainted with Thornton Davidson, and Mr. Molson, both victims of the wreck.

CITY COUNCIL MEETS TO-NIGHT

To deal further with the question of a refuse dumping ground for the city, and also with the Fair Grounds matter, a meeting of the City Council is called to-night at eight o'clock in the council chamber. The city fathers will consider the purchasing of the Minicolo property, as a dumping ground, seeing that the Jackson site is no longer on the market.

ASTRONOMICAL MEETING TO-NIGHT AT THE COLLEGIATE

In the Collegiate Institute to-night there will be a meeting of the Astronomical Society.

Although this meeting is held under the auspices of this society, it is without expense of any kind to the audience, yet it is held for the general public just as much as for the members.

The public is most cordially invited to come and bring all their friends.

The subject for to-night will be "Mars, and are there any inhabitants up there?"

Mars is so favorably situated that a great deal has been learned about our next neighbor in the skies.

Mars is on the road ahead of us in the point of development and as we trace its history. Its story will be but a prophesy of our own.

ALL WHEELS ON G.T.R. TO STOP DURING MEMORIAL SERVICE

Montreal, April 22—It is planned, during the coming week to pay a tribute to the late Chas. M. Hays, unique in the history of Canada, when every wheel on the Grand Trunk, Grand Trunk Pacific and affiliated lines in Canada and the United States will simultaneously stop for several minutes during the course of a memorial service. This not merely to emphasize the loss these railways have sustained but to give the thousands of employes in two countries an opportunity to, in spirit, join in the memorial service, for the chief they have lost.

ODD INSANITY TO BE PLEA OF CLARENCE RICHESON

Boston, April 22— Insanity of an unusual form, which will be described by alienists at the hearing before Governor Foss and the Executive Council, a disordered state of mind carrying with it a claim of legal irresponsibility, will be alleged in the petition for the commutation of the tence of Clarence V. T. Richeson from death to life imprisonment.

A volume of evidence relating to Richeson's family history, which Attorney John L. Lee, of Virginia, has been collecting for weeks will be augmented by the findings of mental experts engaged to observe the prisoner in his cell at the Charles st. jail.

Although he has not written a letter to his son since the latter confessed that he poisoned Avis Linnell, the prisoner's aged father, Thomas Varland Richeson, will come to Boston from Amherst, Va., to be in close touch with the proceedings into which every possible effort and influence will be instilled to save the former Cambridge preacher from going to the electric chair during the week of May 19.

RICHESON'S FATHER COMING

It was learned to-day that the father will probably accompany Attorney Lee to Boston, but no definite date has been fixed for their arrival. He has written asking that the proceedings be executed with all possible despatch as he has many legal engagements in the South.

Counsel are not discussing the details of their plans, but it is now assured that no steps will be taken before April 26, when Governor Foss will hear the case prepared by Attorneys Morse and Lee. The petition will be formally entered a few days later and will be submitted to the Executive Council by Governor Foss to be voted upon.

The closing week of April will be a critical period in the life of Richeson. It will determine his fate. That is why not only his old father but all of his brothers and sisters are expected here. They wish to be in touch with every development in the last fight to avert not only the pain but the disgrace of the execution of a man who occupied a pulpit. Many church interests are expected to give support to the commutation plea, more to prevent a stain on the church than from sympathy for the transgressor who forgot his vows.

While counsel decline to reveal details, it is known that they have secured data which they consider will be sufficiently convincing to offset the court's decree and permit the young Virginian to repent in a prison cell. The evidence is said to embrace features of a surprising nature.

Crazed With Pain.

Barrie, April 22.—Grasping a large clasp knife Jutina Salminen, a Finlander, aged 21 years, who had both legs cut off by a freight train on Friday evening, attempted to commit suicide in the hospital here, exclaiming in broken English that he could stand the pain no longer. A companion took the knife from him.

Salminen, in company with five other countrymen, had attempted to board a train of flat cars, and he fell under the wheels. He lost a large quantity of blood before a doctor was summoned, and was in such a weakened state that little could be done for him. He died during the night.

Fez Recaptured.

Paris, April 22.—The City of Fez, the capital of Morocco, which had practically fallen into the hands of the riotous citizens and mutinous Moorish soldiers, has been recaptured by the French troops, numbering 2,000, stationed there after a desperate battle, in which a large number were killed and wounded. According to a wireless despatch received from Fez, at the Foreign Office yesterday morning, order has now been completely re-established.

People who raise objections are always sure of a bountiful crop.

LOCAL CANADIAN LEAGUERS WILL BE KNOWN AS WHITE CAPS

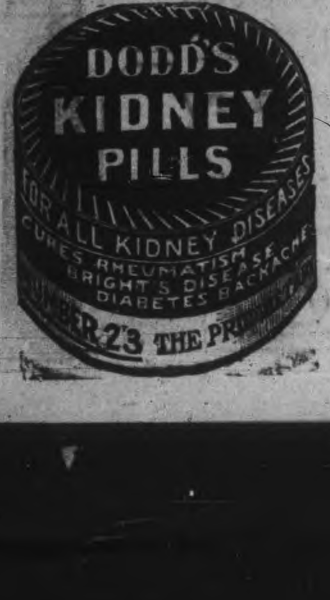
local Canadian leguaers

A meeting of the executive of the Peterborough Ball Club was held Saturday night. They decided to call the team White Caps which was the name first proposed by Mr. W. H. Denham. The work of fixing the ball grounds and engaging a travelling secretary was discussed but it was decided leave these matters until later when another meeting will be called.

The schedule is satisfactory to the Peterborough Club and will be published as soon as official authority is given.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

It begins to look as if the Canadian league schedule as drawn up by Secretary Robinson and sent to each club this week for approval, will have the necessary O.K. stamp marked on it. Berlin is the first club to be heard from, and Secretary Rhodes has pronounced the draft as an excellent piece of work. He takes but one objection, and that is a minor one, Berlin being scheduled at home for ten games in a row from June 12 to June 20. This is practically necessary, as the Dutchmen are on the road continually from May 24 to June 6, owing to the fact that their grounds will not be ready until that date. The Hamilton club is well pleased with the dates alloted to them, as are the London directors, and barring the complaint from Guelph to the effect that Guelph is scheduled to open in London instead Hamilton as they desired, no kick has as yet been made. The Guelph complaint is groundless. The opening game in London should prove just as good as the opening in Hamilton. And in addition the schedule calls for Peterborough to open at Hamilton, for the single reason that it would hardly do to have the Petes jump direct from their home town to London for the opening game. This would be necessary if Guelph was given the Hamilton opening.—Hamilton Spectator.



LONDON'S SQUAD OF THIRTY

London, Ont., April 22— Manager Frank Bowerman of the London Canadian League team is expected here on Monday next and in the meantime work is progressing on changes at Tecumseh Park. The players will report at the end of the month and the new out their own war clubs and anyone who sneaks another fellow's bat and breaks it, is due for a licking Such a performance is worse than stealing another man's wife down South.

It is hoped young Shortsleeve will turn out some kind of a catcher, as a manager will have upwards of thirty to select from. In addition to those already signed by the club, he has arranged for several known good good players. Messrs. O'Neil, Reason Somerville and Stevely of the London club left for Detroit to-day to attend the opening game there and confer with Bowerman.

An interesting phase of the London situation is the capitulation this week of a local morning newspaper, which made the belated announcement of the engagement of the new manager and other interesting news concerning the team.

SPORT TALK

Jack Johnson says that his announcement that he would retire from the ring in September is no joke.

The big black has laid plans to go into business next fall and says he expects to leave the fight game strictly alone.

"I've spent so much money in cafes I beleive I ought to know how to run one right," said he. "I am going to start up the finest place in the country for colored folks. It will be right here in Chicago, and my plans were completed to-day."

From the latest announcements it looks as though the Johnson-Flynn debate would take place in Las Vegas N.M., on July 4, both men going in training on June 11.

Baseball, although possibly the most popular game in existence to-day played as it is by many nations, only came into being some 67 years ago. In 1845 the first club to play the game was founded, the Kickerbocker Club of New York. They did not play the game as it is played now. There were three referees and a runner was out if hit by a thrown ball. The first annual meeting of baseball clubs formed into an association was held in New York in 1859, and this may be called the start of baseball as it is to-day. In 1862 the first admission fee was charged to a baseball game and soon afterwards the game changed from amateur to professional, the fate of every sport in which the gate receipts loom large. In 1871 the Amateur Association passed out of existence and the National Association came into being.

After this, the dark years of baseball arrived. The game was attacked on every hand, even from the pulpit as being dishonest and tending to encourage gambling. A few of the leading spirits in baseball got together and formed the National Association cleaning out the gambling practises and putting the game upon a clean basis once again. Club owners made large fortunes and the players were underpaid at first, but in 1887 John M. Ward, now president of the Boston Club, organized the Brotherhood, and in 1889 when the slogan "not more than $2,000 for any player" was heard, the players formed the Players' League.

The league failed, but it taught a needed lesson to the club owners and not since that time has a salary limit been proposed in major league ball. In 1900 Ban Johnson started the American League, and a baseball war started. It ranged with varying fortunes for a couple of years, and then the owners, finding that they were losing money, came together and formed the National Baseball Commission, and peace again reigned. Since that time the game has grown wonderfully. It is played now in many other countries than the United States, where it commenced. Last season over $12,000,000 came out of the pockets of the public in Canada and the States for the support of baseball.

How Trouble Came.

Once dar wuz a man what bought a wilderness for ter live in, an' he lived peaceable an' all alone, but one day he got so lonesome dat he prayed fer company, an' w'en de company come dey got him ter sign away all his rights ter de place, an' purty soon he didn't have a tree ter set under.—Atlanta Constitution.

Transparent.

"I want your advice," said the soft spoken man.

"No, you don't," replied Mr. Growcher. "You want me to think you want my advice, so I'll think you are a fine, sensible man and feel like doing you favors. That's what you want."—Washington Star.

LEE'S BURIAL CASKET.

Strange Manner In Which It Came When It Was Needed.

Mrs. La Salle Corbell Pickett tells this story connected with the burial of General Robert E. Lee. It seems that when he died at Lexington, Va., the North river, a tributary to the James, had overflowed its banks, and Lexington was cut off from all communication with the outside world. A warehouse was washed away and with it all the supplies contained therein, including all the coffins in the city.

"In this extremity," writes Mrs. Pickett in Lippincott's, "Professor Nelson of the University of Virginia was consulting with some of the other professors as to what could be done. In the midst of their dilemna two boys came up to them in a timid way, hesitating to approach the group of dignified strangers, yet feeling the necessity of imparting the information they were bringing. Each feared to be the first to speak and pushed the other on, saying:

"'You tell.'

"'No; you tell. You saw it first.'

"'No; you saw it at the same time.'

"'Saw what?' asked Professor Nelson, who was a judge of boys, and perceived that there was something of unusual importance on their minds.

"'Yes; saw what?' repeated one of his companions.

"Encouraged by the readiness to receive their tidings, one of them replied, 'A coffin.'

"'We saw it,' affirmed the other.

"'Yes; we saw it there upon the shore—there by the island.'

"'On the shore—a coffin? Where?'

"'Just about three miles from town. We saw it,' said the boy who had first spoken. 'Maybe nobody's in it. We was too scared to do more than see the outside and then we tuck out. 'Tain't never been used. It's bran' spankin' new.'

"'I wonder if they really saw it or only imagined it,' said one of the gentlemen.

"Professor Nelson arose and turned to the boys, saying:

"'Come and show us the way.'

"The boys led on and all followed, uncertain as to what they were to find, but trusting that in some way heaven had graciously supplied their great necessity. Along the river bank they walked until their two guides stopped beside a long closed box that had floated down the swollen waters in the great flood and drifted ashore. In the box was a beautiful coffin."

They carried home the box and in that casket all that was earthly of the famous general was laid to rest in the college chapel.

Balks the Jail Breakers.

A detective was talking about jail breaking.

"Down in Colombo," he said, "they have got a very good dodge against the jail breaker. It's simple too. Just bricks. You see, the Mutival jail at Colombo is surrounded by a very high brick wall. Well, the last dozen courses of these bricks are laid loose, without mortar. So when you try to escape you climb stealthily, hardly daring to breathe, up the wall, and with a sigh of relief you reach the loose course at the top and—clatter, crash, bang, clatter—a thousand bricks in the profound silence fall with a noise fit to wake the dead and a dozen warders rush out and you climb down sadly into their waiting arms."—New York Press.

Persian Pipe Bearer on Horseback.

A picturesque feature of Persian field sports is the pipe bearer, an important retainer who rides close behind his master, bearing the whole elaborate paraphernalia of the Persian water pipe down to the glowing charcoal suspended in a small brazier. If the party is a large one it will generally be found that some member of it is riding soberly along, pulling steadily at a large silver kalian, or water pipe, the pointed base of the water bowl being securely supported by a strap fixed to the peak of the saddle.—Wide World Magazine.

Deserves a Medal.

Who was or is the greatest woman in all history? Two hundred schoolteachers answered the question, and with enthusiasm and unanimity the judges awarded the prize to the one who made this reply: "The wife of the farmer of moderate means who does her own cooking, washing, ironing, sewing, brings up a family of boys and girls to be useful members of society and finds time for intellectual improvement."

DON'T LIE, LITTLE GIRL.

[With apologies to James Whitcomb Riley.]

There, little girl, don't lie!
You don't love that old "dub," I know,
And perchance you may rue
What you're going to do,
And the days seem long ere they go,
For your step for his gold may come high—
There, little girl, don't lie!

There, little girl, don't lie!
He's got a rotten old past, I know,
And the mad, wild ways
Of his wild oat days
Were the talk of the long ago,
But his big limousine will soon come by—
There, little girl, don't lie!

There, little girl, don't lie!
He's a pickled old "soak," I know,
But your nightly dreams
Are of diamond gleams
And fine dresses all in a row,
For his wealth holds all for which you sigh—
There, little girl, don't lie!

Women and Leap Year.

Woman's leap year privilege was established by law centuries ago. A law of Scotland passed in 1228 gave woman the right to propose in leap year and imposed a fine of $5 on the man who refused. The first English law on the leap year privilege was passed in 1600.

Palm of the Hand.

The palm of the hand has eight divisions composed of one triangle and seven mounts. The triangle is located in the center of the hand and is sometimes called the plain of Mars, being surrounded by the seven mounts of Jupiter, Saturn, Apollo, Mercury, Mars, Venus and the moon.

Carp are eaten in Germany on Christmas eve, and those at table scrape a few of the scales off and place them in their purses to insure having plenty of money during the coming year.

South America is nearly twice as large as the whole of Europe.

Seaweed Barometer.

One of the oldest and simplest ways of telling whether the air is dry or moist is to suspend a piece of seaweed out of doors or even in an apartment where there is no artificial heat. The weed is crisp and dry at the approach of fine weather, while it is flabby and moist when rain is likely.

Mistletoe.

Mistletoe is seldom found on the oak, the principal trees from which it is gathered being the apple, lime, hawthorn and maple.

Bagpipes.

Although bagpipes are Scotland's national instrument, there are only two Scottish articles used in their construction, the sheepskin and the tartan. The wood—ebony or cocus—comes from Africa or Jamaica, the ivory from Africa, the horn from Australia and the cane for the reed from Spain.

The Yule Log.

In olden times a bonfire was kindled in honor of the god Thor, a procession was formed, and a huge log was drawn to the spot and thrown upon the fire. This was the origin of the Yule log.

WHY A WATCH WEARS OUT

Neglect is responsible for most Watches going wrong. A Watch should be thoroughly overhauled, at least once a year. Dust collecting in a Watch causes it to run dry, the grit will then wear away the delicate bearings. If you own a good watch, better be on the safe side — Bring it to our Repair Department where it will receive Skilled Attention.

Cynthia's Chauffeur
By LOUIS TRACY
Copyright by McLeod & Allen, Toronto

ONE OF THE MOST POPULAR LOVE STORIES EVER WRITTEN

"Pity I'm not a circus lady, to balance myself on your head," siad Cynthia.

SYNOPSIS

The scene of "Cynthia's Chauffeur," one of Louis Tracy's latest and most fascinating stories is laid in Britain and together with a tale of love and adventure gives a vivid description of old Historic England. Miss Cynthia Vanrenen a young and attractive American heiress and her companion Mrs. Devar are to take a thousand mile run through the country stopping at places of interest in a car hired for the purpose by her father. Unknown to them young Lord Medenham usurps the place of the rightful chauffeur and acts as such during the trip. His personality and manner are so striking that Cynthia finds him a very interesting companion and devotes much time to him, greatly to the displeasure of her chaperone, who has plans for her and a penniless French Count. Medenham and the Frenchman met under embarassing circumstances and as a result the former incurs the enmity of the Frenchman, who, after the trip challenges his rival to a duel. Owing to the skill of the Count, so characteristic in Frenchmen, the young English Lord is seriously wounded. Fate brings this to Cynthia's ear together with his identity and she at once hurries to his bedside. Needless to say he recovers and like most stories everything turns out happily. The story from first to last unfolds in liveliest fashion, offering a continuous whirl of mirth and excitement.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—As a ratepayer of Harvey I want it understood that I am like many other Harvey people dissatisfied with the proposed settlement for the township's drowned lands. We have heard a great deal about the damages that the township was to get for drowned lands. This has been going on now for some time, and the township so far has got nothing, but when I saw that the Council had authorized Mr. Shaw, the Reeve, to sign a clear receipt for all the damages to the township drowned land in Harvey for $950, I, like many others, realized that it was a great mistake, for $950 will not begin to pay for the damages, and that Mr. Shaw will have succeeded in doing a very bad thing for Harvey if he prevents the township getting more than $950. We have heard a good deal about the bungle he made of the Buckhorn bridge, but I think that the bungle he has made regarding the damages to the township lands is even worse, and I hope something will be done to bring before the Government the necessary facts, ignoring the Council's offer and giving us something that we really ought to get.

Yours truly,
RATEPAYER.

To The Editor of The Review.

Sir—When the People's Chimes were subscribed for, it was with the strict understanding that they were to be a source of joy and pleasure to us all. If those in charge think that the present management has fulfilled the conditions, they are very much mistaken.

Clerks and others in the congested district of the city, where the bells are situated, are overworked until midnight of each Saturday and are in the midst of their refreshing sleep on Sunday morning, when the Chimes disturb their slumbers, not only once but on and off several times.

The suffering public would respectfully ask that the present practice be discontinued, until, say, nine o'clock.

Yours etc.,
"SUFFERER."

April 22, 1912.

"Sufferer" must have one or more of the numerous spring ailments, and needs a tonic to enable him to peacefully repose on Sunday morning. The People's Chimes may be a blessing in disguise for him as well as many others. Were he to arise, even as late as the chimes are first rung, and do one, two, three or five miles without any attempt to lower any walking record, he might on his return, eat a good breakfast and prepare himself for the Sabbath morning service, at which he might conclude that this is not such a gloomy old world after all and that life is too short to waste time in writing letters to the newspapers, at least on such a subject as he writes to-day. As for the clerks and others in the congested districts who are overworked until midnight on Saturdays, that is not a fact.

WAS FAITHFUL WORKER AT KNOX CHURCH

In the course of his evening sermon on Bartholomew or the apostle with a prejudice, Rev. Mr. Keith made fitting reference to the late Myles Lake who died a week ago to-day. Mr. Keith found in Mr. Lake's life, an illustration of the development of spiritual life and growing interest in service. Mr. Lake was, previous to his sickness, one of the most faithful members of Knox church. He was in constant attendance at morning and evening service, assisting in whatever way he could. He was also a faithful and interested member of the Men's Bible Class. During his illness he revealed a wonderfully mature spiritual experience and daily found comfort in the scriptures. Mr. Keith related an interesting experience in connection with Mr. Lake's sickness. One of the elders visited him to comfort him, but came away himself helped by the visit. He left behind a daily calendar that had a verse for each day. This became a source of strength to Mr. Lake, and eagerly he watched for the next day and its message. On the closing day of his life, the fitting message was read to him "I know that my Redeemer liveth and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the Earth."

His life made its own appeal to members and officers for greater faithfulness in service and to the indifferent for submission to Christ.

CASE SETTLED BY MARRIAGE

Lindsay Warder.

County Magistrate Moore, K. C., held court this morning in the council chamber, in conclusion of the case held some days ago by the same Magistrate at Bobcaygeon.

This was a case where a young man of that town secluded the objects of his affections in a certain house against the wishes of her friends.

For this he was apprehended and charged with abduction. Barrister I. E. Weldon appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. L. V. O'Connor for the defendant, Mr. Weldon having the case settled by a union of hearts between the two young people, who are now man and wife.

Barrister Weldon is not exactly in the marrying business but was very successful in closing this deal.

Magistrate Moore dismissed the case with costs to the defendant.

NEW PROTESTANT HOME ABOUT TO BE OPENED

Situated on an eminence on Water street north, at the West side, commanding a splendid view in three directions, there stands the New Peterborough Protestant Home, the doors of which are to be formally thrown open on April 30th. The building at present is receiving its finishing touches and when completed will in every detail be a modern and first-class structure. The designing of the building both in the interior and exterior has been carried out on a generous, yet economical basis; generous owing to the ample accomodation it will offer, and economical in the sense that every available part of the building has been utilized for a useful purpose. The interior fixings especially reveal the most careful and conscientious wormanship.

The architectural features of the building derive their greatest commendation from their very simplicity. There is no unnecessary ornateness connected with it, and yet the most casual and untrained eye can readily detect that the building is planned to provide comfort primarily, and next, ample accomodation.

Under the guidance of one of the lady officials of the new institution a Review representative toured the entire building on Saturday. He was genuinely surprised at the elaborate preparations which have made for caring for its future occupants, the old, the destitute, and the needy, be they men, women or children. In many respects, the institute closely adheres to the workings of a hospital with matrons, wards, sun parlors, and especially commodious verandahs and balconies where future inmates may drink deeply of the exhilarating tonic, pure air.

The building is almost square and is comprised of three stories and the basement. In reality it is two buildings, as one wing will be devoted to the male inmates and the other to the women. The masculine inmates will occupy the western half. Between these two wings, and facing south, the same direction as the structure, is a large verandah and balcony. The balcony is divided off so that it will not be necessary for the women to mix with the men while sitting out. At the rear, there is a similar large verandah and balcony with French windows leading out. The building is of red brick, and the woodwork inside is black birch throughout. This gives an elegant and extremely rich effect and one that will be much admired. There are sixteen rooms on the first floor alone, including the kitchen. The first floor is so constructed that the kitchen is only one story high. All the other chambers are roomy and bright, with excellent lighting facilities. In fact the entire building is amply supplied with windows, and ventilation has been carefully provided for. While communication between the men and women's departments is only separated by doors, yet each wing will be under separate management and have its own staff in charge. There are excellent and convenient sanitary arrangements and a serviceable fire protection system on every floor. The building will be heated by two brand new Gurney furnaces.

In the basement which is all concrete floored is a little room, which will likely be one of the least used of any. This is a little cell with a barred door, in which any obstreperous inmate will be lodged, should such actions be found necessary.

Some of the wards are being furnished by benevolently disposed and interested parties.

Mrs. Hazlitt has donated two chandeliers for the women's dining room; Judge Roger will equip a private ward, the Sons of England, a couple of the men's wards; E. F. Mason, a mission room, and the Misses Morrow another room.

Accommodation is easily equal to seventy-five inmates. The architectural success of the building was due to Mr. Sandford Smith, of the firm of Bond and Smith, architects, Toronto, and the construction was directed by Ald. Graham. Ald. Geo. Duncan had the contract for the painting and decorating.

The expenses in connection with furnishing the institution, will be quite heavy, but if $3000 is forthcoming everything can be arranged for satisfactorily.

The formal opening on April 30th, will likely be graced by the presence of the Lieutenant Governor, and other prominent officials. There will be speeches and a high class program. The invitation list will be limited to officials of the city, but the public are cordially invited to be present on the occasion, and form their own opinions of the institution which is in every sense a creditable addition to the beneficent institutions of the city.

MAGISTRATE DUMBLE HAD BIG POLICE COURT DOCKET

Police Suspect "Blind Pig" But Evidence is Not Sufficient to Convict.

A large number of offenders appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning to answer to various charges, and a large number of the city's unemployed looked on.

William Bruce, of Millbrook, charged with being drunk and disorderly, paid $2 and costs, amounting to $5.85 for his joilification.

CASE OF ASSAULT.

A local man was charged with assaulting John Dunsford in a hotel yard of this city. John Dunsford testified that the defendant used abusive language and struck him when there was not the slightest cause to do so. The defendant pleaded guilty to the charge and was fined $5 and costs, amounting to $8.75.

Another visitor pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly. His Worship imposed the usual fine of $2 and costs.

Jim Hayes, an old offender, pleaded guilty to being drunk. Magistrate Dumble imposed the fine of $2, to be paid in ten days, or Jim will spend 15 days on the hill.

Still another pleaded guilty to being drunk in a public place. He paid $2 for his fun like the other fellows who drank too freely of the flowing bowl

SPRING HAS COME.

It is certain that spring is here to stay, as a local gentleman paid $2 to the city for riding his bicycle on the sidewalk. This is a never failing sign.

A BLIND PIG?

The proprietor of a billiard room and tobacco store on George street was charged with selling liquor on his premises, April 9th and 11th, when he had not license to so do.

A large number of witnesses were heard, but their evidence was very confused and they had a tendency to contradict each other. They had a very poor memory as to things that had occurred on the premises, but admitted that they had received a drink of beer, which was in a tin pail in the cellar. No one remembered how the beer arrived, and no clue could be found as to the person who purchased the wet goods and brought it to the pool room. Numerous empty bottles were found in the basement, but these were evidently left there by people who occupied the store previously, or by fellows who had been drinking in the cellar.

The proprietor of the store was placed in the box. He gave evidence to the effect that he allowed no drinking on his premises, but that the store was designed in such a manner that fellows could get down cellar with liquor without his knowledge, as when he was in the tobacco store or in the west end of the pool room he could not command a view of the stairs leading down to the basement. He knew indirectly that drinking was being carried on there, but denied that he ever sold intoxicating liquor in the store. He had tried to run a respectable place, he said.

His Worship, after considering the evidence, concluded that the proprietor knew men drank in his cellar, but could not say that he allowed them, and as the evidence which was heard was not sufficient to convict him, he would dismiss the case, but wished this to be a warning. If the accused did not prevent his place from being a rendezvous for a number of toughs, he would lose his license for a pool room.

GRAVEL BANK BEING WORN AWAY BY THE WATER

The boils at the waterworks dam attracted quite a large number of people who were out for a stroll Sunday afternoon. It was reported, too, that the department had a gang of men at work repairing damage done by the water. At present there is a large volume of water passing this point, and its force is so great that it is feared the east bank of the river for some distance south of the dam will suffer. The boils and waves surge over the concrete retaining wall, but it protects the gravel bank as far as it extends. There is, however, no protection for the bank to the south, and if the high water mark continues, the force of the water will wear away a considerable portion of the bank.

Homeseekers' and Settlers' Special Trains to Western Canada

Tickets will also be on sale on certain dates via Sarnia and Northern Navigation Company. This is an exceptional opportunity for those wishing to take advantage of the remarkably low one-way Settlers' rates or round trip homeseekers' excursions through the American cities. No change of cars. Secure tickets and berth reservations from any Grand Trunk Agent, or write A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto. dtf

Would Help Americans.

Ottawa, April 22.—Declaring that he is ready to go ahead and build the Georgian Bay Canal at any time, Sir Robert Perks, the millionaire British contractor, is in Ottawa to-day.

The cost of the great waterway would now figure up to about $15,000,000, instead of the $110,000,000 first estimated.

Canada, if it thought it should have two canals, could afford to build the Welland one, said Sir Robert, but he considered the latter would be mainly for the advantage of Americans. As for the Georgian Bay scheme, the Conservative Government had, of course, been only a short time in power and needed time to consider it.

NEW NEEDLEWORK

Charming Adornment For the Dainty Handkerchief.

GAILY TINTED BUTTERFLIES.

The Pretty Insects Are Traced and Embroidered on Fine, Sheer, Fast Colored Batiste or Lawn—Unique In Sofa Cushion Designs.

The all white handkerchief is, of course, always with us, yet every now and then comes some pretty and novel fashion of using delicate colors on the sheer white or white embroidery on a mouchoir of palest blue, pink or lavender, and it must be confessed that the result is one to be desired.

One of the prettiest of these handkerchiefs with the color touch and one that any woman with a taste for needlework will enjoy making for herself has delicately tinted butterflies appliqued in the corners with a fine hemming stitch or the tiniest and most even of feather stitching.

The butterflies should be traced on sheer, fine, fast colored batiste or lawn, allowing enough material outside the outline to turn under. In sewing them on great care must be taken to keep the knots and fastenings underneath the body of the butterfly and out of sight. Featherstitching should be done with very exact evenness, and the stitches that show on the under side can be wrought into ornamental effect by a second line of stitchery, caught into the original working threads, but not going through to show on the upper side. French knots can be used for the "feelers" and even—set close together—for the bodies, but all work done on the butterflies themselves should be done before they are cut out and applied.

Palest yellow on white will suggest the first butterflies seen in the spring, and these are of a shape easy to copy, but any illustration may be copied and stitches adapted to give either natural or conventional effect, as the worker's choice may dictate.

Sofa cushions are always being made by the needleworker, and new designs are constantly being put forward for her benefit. The pillow pictured is intended for use in a reception room, and naturally there is no hint of lounging in its makeup. Squares of tapestry with very conventional patterns in pastel shades on a cream satin ground make charming pillows for the drawing room, and the satin back should match the general tones of the furnishings. These squares are for sale in the upholstery department of all the large shops.

Economies of Women.

Men say that women are "penny wise and pound foolish" when it comes to the question of economy; that while they often pride themselves upon their pet economies they are sometimes guilty of quite unnecessary extravagance.

All of which means that many women economize in one direction only to spend all they have saved and more besides in the ever ready bargain, which they seem unable to resist.

If this is true—and it really is true of many of us—the best remedy in the world is the habit of keeping accounts. This means, in fact, sure economy, if one is at all inclined to be practical.

Women who keep regular accounts and carry carefully and thoughtfully made out lists when they go a-shopping are seldom tempted to extravagance. They are able to retrench with a system that brings quick results when the time of pressure comes.

If each item is written down on the date of purchase, where it stands as a mute witness at the end of the month on the day of reckoning, it must be faced. There's no getting around it.

And it's a simple matter to study every column and take note on the things that were necessaries and the things that might just as well have been left out.

Certain dishes may be banished, certain pleasures foregone, certain innocent but costly amusements sacrificed. Only by thus taking with system each department and then consistently knocking from it as many dollars as is compatible with the family health can a regular economy be practiced.

Sun Worn Curtains.

In cases where a pair of curtains must do for another season and they are too sun worn in the middle to serve cut away the sun worn portions and sew across, then where sewed use a cord of ribbon, and if neither of these is at hand make a couple of straps of old linen and use them to tie the curtains back at the place they are spliced. Old linen bows well starched are neat.

No accident policy can help a man when he falls in love.

COSTLY CORSICAN VOTES.

The Islanders Give a Warm Welcome to Millionaire Candidates.

The island of Corsica, although a part of the republic of France, is quite different in its customs from the republic and never ceases to furnish reading matter out of the ordinary for the Parisian journals. The Corsicans have, it appears, a decided penchant for millionaire candidates for the chamber of deputies and are always on the lookout for this admirable material. Yet there is between them and the millionaires a singular misapprehension. The islanders desire that millionaires be candidates because of the manna that falls upon their country during an electoral campaign, but they do not desire to elect them. As for the millionaires, they are perfectly willing to spread the manna, but they also wish to be elected.

"Recently," says a Paris journal, "one of our most successful money makers went to Corsica to visit his future department. At his debarkation several dozens of Corsicans received him with 'hourrahs,' and guns were fired, which down there is the last word of enthusiasm. He undertook a tour of the country. At each village Corsicans, magnificent in local color, acclaimed him and wakened the echoes with gunpowder.

"At the third village, however, he had something of a sensation. He had a visit from a farmer, who said to him: 'We are four brothers, all voters, ready to vote for you. Buy for me the meadow that is on the other side of the village and you have our votes.'

"'How much is this meadow?'

"'A trifle, 12,000 francs.'

"After a tour of eight days the millionaire calculated that to pay for all the votes that had been offered to him would require 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 francs. And even after that expenditure he would not be certain of election.

"He withdrew from the canvass, but he had already expended some hundred thousand francs, of which his enthusiastic welcomers had their full share. They really would like to have him come again."—Indianapolis News.

WALLED LAKE.

Where Its Water Comes From or Where It Goes Is a Mystery.

One of the curiosities of the west is the "walled lake," something over a hundred miles west of Dubuque, Ia. This lake is from two to three feet higher than the earth's surface. In some places the wall is ten feet high, fifteen feet wide at the bottom and five feet on top. A remarkable circumstance with reference to this odd lake is the size of the stones used in its construction, inasmuch as the whole of them varies in weight from three tons to 100 pounds. There is abundance of stones in Wright county, but surrounding the lake to the extent of five or ten miles there are none.

No one has any idea as to the means employed to bring these stones to the spot or as to who constructed this lake. Around the entire lake is a belt of woodland half a mile in length composed of oak. With this exception the country is a rolling prairie. The trees must have been planted there at the time of the building of the wall. In the spring of the year 1856 there was a great storm, and the ice on the lake broke the wall in several places. The farmers in the vicinity were obliged to repair the damages to prevent inundation. The lake occupies a ground surface of 2,800 acres. The depth of the water is as great as twenty-five feet. The water is clear and cold; the soil is sandy and loamy. It is a singular fact that no one has been able to ascertain where the water comes from nor where it goes, yet it is always fresh and clear.—New York Press.

Green Granite.

A peculiar characteristic of the New England granite veins is the fact that three distinct colors of granite are to be found in as many states, pink in Massachusetts, gray in Connecticut and green in Vermont. Green granite is something of a curiosity because of its rarity. The largest columns of this variety to be found anywhere are those which support the dome in the library of Columbia university.—Exchange.

Driver Is Killed.

Toronto, April 22.—Roland Carter, a driver for the Borthwick Baking Co., Limited, was almost instantly killed when the horse which he was driving ran away on Severn avenue shortly after noon on Saturday.

When at the corner of Severn avenue and Yonge street the horse took fright at a newspaper blown along the roadway by the wind and suddenly bolted down Severn avenue. The unexpected jolt threw Carter from the wagon to the pavement and he fell between the wheels, one of the rear wheels passing over his head.

He was picked up unconscious and died before the arrival of the police ambulance.

MANAGER TEMPLIN IS FIT FOR THE COMING RACE

Manager Curtis Templin has arrived in the city and is certainly looking in fine shape for the coming ball season. He has been working out on one of the best minor league ball parks in America. He is arranging for the transportation of his ball team, who are all in great shape, and they are expected to report about the 1st of May. The players are fine temperate fellows, which is one of the principal things of a good ball club. The infield consists of large men, while the outfield is formed of men of small build, and when the Peterboro fans see this combination in action, they will get the ball fever with a vengeance.

Manager Templin will need a private secretary if ball players do not stop sending letters for a position on his team. He has received about 75 applications, but although some of these are from good men, he will not consider them as he has his team signed, and is in such a way, that if he needs more players, he can easily land them.

A Review representative had an interesting chat with Manager Templin to-day, at the Oriental, his headquarters. He was modest as he spoke of his hunt during the past few weeks, for players, but displayed an enthusiasm, that should help, a whole lot, during the coming season.

And Manager Templin has a smile. Here's hoping it will broaden and expand, and that the local fans will catch on and do likewise.

UNKNOWN SHIP FIVE MILES OFF FAILED TO ASSIST THE TITANIC

Sensation Is Sprung at the Enquiry When Fourth Officer J. B. Boxhall Says He Signalled to a Vessel Which He and Captain Saw Passing After Collision, But Received No Reply—Not Enough Boats.

Washington, Auril 23.—With succor only five miles away, the Titanic slid into its watery grave, carrying with it more than 1,600 of its passengers and crew, while an unidentified steamer that might have saved all, failed or refused to see the frantic signals flashed to it for aid.

This phase of the tragic disaster was brought out last night before the Senate investigation committee, when J. E. Boxhall, fourth officer of the Titanic, told of his unsuccessful attempts to attract the stranger's attention. This ship, according to Boxhall, could not have been more than five miles away and was steaming toward the Titanic. So close was it that from the bridge Boxhall plainly saw its masthead lights, and then its red side light. Both with rockets and with the Morse electric signal did the young officer hail the stranger.

Captain Smith and several others in the vicinity of the bridge declared at the time their belief that the vessel had seen them and was signaling in reply. Boxhall failed to see the replies, however, and in any case the steamer kept on its course obliquely past the Titanic without extending aid.

This and the declaration of P. A. S. Franklin, vice-president of the White Star Line that there was not sufficient lifeboats aboard the Titanic to care for the ship's company at one time, were easily the features of the hearing.

The official was quizzed throughout the morning session on the messages exchanged between the Carpathia and himself after the ship had started for New York with the Titanic's survivors on board. Among the survivors was J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the line.

Among the wireless telegrams read into the record was one from Mr. Ismay urging that the steamship Cedric be held until the Carpathia arrived with its sorry burden. He declared he believed it "most desirable" that the survivors of the Titanics crew be rushed out of the country as quickly as possible. He also, the message said, would sail on the Cedric and asked that clothing be ready at the pier for him when the Carpathia docked. The Senate's subpoena blocked the plan.

The committee resumed its hearing at 10 o'clock this morning.

Fourth Officer Boxhall is expected to continue on the stand to tell more fully of the events immediately preceding the collision.

J. B. Boxhall, the fourth officer of the Titanic, after giving his account of the events of the fateful night, told of seeing another steamship a few miles away. By the captain's orders he had gone to the wireless room to give the operators the ship's position. Then he went back to the lifeboats, where he found many men and women with lifebelts on. He continued:

"After that I was on the bridge most of the time sending out distress signals, trying to attract the attention of boats ahead," he said. "I sent up distress rockets until I left the ship, to try to attract the attention of a ship directly ahead. I had seen her lights. She seemed to be meeting us and not far away.

"She got close enough, so she seemed to me, to read our electric Morse signals. I told the captain. He stood with me much of the time, trying to signal her. He told me to tell her in Morse rocket signals, 'Come at once—we are sinking'."

"Did any answer come?" asked Senator Smith.

"I did not see them, but two men say they saw signals from that ship."

"How far away do you think the ship was from you?"

"Approximately five miles."

Boxhall said he did not know what ship it was.

"Have you learned anything about that ship since?"

"No. Some people say she replied to our rockets and our signals, but I did not see it."

"By 'some people' whom do you mean?"

"Not passengers, but stewards and the captain all declared they saw them."

"Suppose you had had a powerful searchlight on the Titanic could you have thrown a beam on the vessel and have compelled her attention?"

"We might."

Boxhall gave testimony which will probably allow the committee to test the accuracy of a story by a steward to the effect that the men in the crow's nest had reported ice ahead and First Officer Murdock had disregarded the warning. Boxhall said the two men in the crow's nest were Fleet and Leigh. The usual quota of officers were on the lookout.

To Alter "Gigantic" Plans.

London, April 23.—It is understood that the plans of the White Star Gigantic, which is now being built at Belfast, and which was to have been 1,000 feet in length, will be modified. It is probable that the new plans will provide for double cellular bottom and sides, such as the Mauretania and Lusitania have as a stipulated condition of receiving the Government subsidy.

The Olympic has been provided with 4 collapsible boats and will carry 16 additional lifeboats.

"Thunderer" Counsel Caution.

London, April 23.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Times deprecates strongly the growing tendency on both sides of the Atlantic to prejudice the circumstances of the Titanic disaster. "We owe it to ourselves as a nation," it says, "to await the proper verdict with something of the calm which dignified our fellow-countrymen in the actual terrors of the wreck. We shall pass no verdict, till a full enquiry has been held by a qualified British court."

Recognition of Heroes.

New York, April 23.—The attention of the Carnegie hero commission will be directed to the gallantry displayed by certain of the men passengers on the Titanic, as well as some of the officers and crew, who went down with the ship, by some of the survivors. Special attention is to be given the heroism of Major Archibald Butt, aide to President Taft.

It was reported yesterday that the Carnegie commission was already considering detailing investigators to get all the facts for its use.

British Commons to Probe.

London, April 23.—Last night's session of the House of Commons was devoted to a debate of the Titanic catastrophe, and the Board of Trade's antiquated regulations were brought into discussion.

A regular fusilade of questions was fired at Sydney Buxton, president of the Board of Trade, prior to the introduction of Mr. Crook's motion.

Mr. Butxon in reply announced that he already had summoned a meeting of the leading British shipowners for an immediate exchange of views. He had also taken steps to confer with the Lord Chancellor in regard to the appointment of a high legal authority as wreck commissioner to preside over the Titanic enquiry. All questions as to route, speed, lifeboats, search lights, etc., would, he said, be submitted to a searching investigation by the strongest possible court of enquiry, and if the Board of Trade's present powers were inadequate to enforce the necessary regulations he would not hesitate to ask Parliament to confer further powers.

To Cease Work 5 Minutes.

Montreal, April 23.—Next Thursday morning there will be an absolute cessation of work in every department of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways and their affiliating lines for the space of five minutes, as a most impressive memorial to the late Charles M. Hays. Canada, Great Britain and the United States, all will take part; also steamboats on the Great Lakes and Pacific Coast. Early this morning telegraphic instructions were sent out conveying the orders, with the time so arranged that the cessation of work for nearly half-way around the world shall be simultaneous.

CLOTHES LINE MAY FIGURE LARGELY IN ROSENTHAL MURDER MYSTERY

Police Hope to Prove That Piece of Rope Found Around Rosenthal's Neck Was Taken From Gibson's Backyard—Mrs. Caplin and Youth Named Britt Say Gibson Passed Under Name of Smith.

Toronto, April 23.—That the crown will try to prove that the piece of rope found around the neck of the body of Joseph Rosenthal when he was found murdered in the rear of the Hydro-electric station in Strachan avenue, the morning following Good Friday, was part of a clothes line from the roof of the kitchen of the house where Gibson stayed, was shown by questions asked Wm. Britt, 149 Ontario street, when he was on the stand at the continued inquest at the morgue, before Coroner J. M. Cotton last night. Evidence was called to show that Gibson was the mysterious "Smith" who had been looking for Rosenthal on Tuesday and Wednesday preceding the murder. It was also shown that he had been at the Hydro station when Dunkelman said that he and Rosenthal had met the men with whom they finally went to deal on the Friday night.

Chief Coroner Johnson described the injuries to the dead man, saying that any of three would have caused death and that any one of them would have stopped him as a factor in a fight.

The greatest light was thrown upon the case by the evidence of Britt. He said that Gibson had worked for the Hydro-electric until last fall as a timekeeper. He had gone out with Gibson Tuesday evening, when Gibson said that a Jew owed him a dollar and he wanted to get it. They went to York and Richmond streets and Gibson went into a store just south on York. He came back and said that he had not found the Jew. This coincided with the evidence of Mrs. Annie Caplin, 181 York street, who said that the young man had come into her store and asked for Rosenthal, saying that he wanted to sell junk to Rosenthal and leaving the name of Smith. The next afternoon, said Britt, he and Gibson had once more gone to the corner and Gibson had again entered the store. This corresponded again with the testimony of Mrs. Caplin. Then they went to Bernstein's restaurant at York and Adelaide, but Gibson did not go in, saying that he was known there.

Britt said that on Wednesday night after 8 o'clock they had gone to Simcoe and Richmond streets, when Gibson went into a house, which the witness subsequently identified as Dunkelman's, to leave a note for the man who, he said, owed him a dollar. He came out and said that he was not in. Afterward they went up Yonge street and met Langmaid, who was with Gibson when he was arrested at the Hydro station in West Market street. Gibson and Langmaid walked down the street in earnest conversation to Queen street, the witness walking behind and out of earshot.

He and Gibson made an appointment with two Parkdale girls to meet them on the Friday night, but later Gibson asked another man to take his place, as he would be unable to keep the appointment. The other man went and when they met the girls, one of them, whom the witness named, asked why Mr. Smith had not come. He asked who had told her that his friend's name was Smith, and she said he had done so himself. He told her that it was not Smith, but Gibson. They returned home about 10.30, and Gibson came along carrying a bundle. His boots and legs of his trousers were covered with mud. He said he had been "out east" and asked Britt to waken him next morning.

Saturday morning when Britt went to waken him at 6 o'clock, he found Gibson cleaning his clothes, and there was a lot of mud on the floor near where he stood. He left the house that day and was not seen again until he was arrested. Britt went with Detective Cronin when the arrest was made. They were looking for Langmaid, and Britt went along to identify him. Cronin asked when he had last seen Gibson, and Langmaid laughed and pointed with his thumb to the lavatory where Gibson was taken behind the door.

In various markets and stalls, 39,000 pounds of bad fish were seized last week.

BIG DECISION ON MAY 4

Toronto, April 23.—The Privy Council's decision as to whether the Supreme Court of Canada has a right to hear stated cases, will not be announced before May 4. This is the date when the ne temere marriage question comes up before the Supreme Court, and Attorney-General Foy's Department sent an enquiry to London, England, to make sure whether the Privy Council would or would not give out their decision before that date.

The significance of the matter is that should the Privy Council decide that the Supreme Court of Canada has not the right to hear stated cases, the hearing of the marriage question that is pending before the Supreme Court might have been invalid. However, the case will now be heard before the Privy Council announces its decision.

Sir James Whitney stated yesterday afternoon that the counsel representing Ontario when the marriage question comes before the Supreme Court, have not yet been appointed, but they will be in a few days.

THE MARRIAGE IS ANNULLED

Montreal, April 23.—Mr. Justice Laurendeau has just annulled the marriage of a young couple which took place here last fall.

The contracting parties were S. B. Wright, a student of Cornell University, Troy, N.Y., and the 20-year-old daughter of Mrs. Lillian Tremblay, of Montreal. They met while the girl was on a visit to some friends at Troy last summer, and the young man came up to Montreal in the fall and the marriage was celebrated without the knowledge of Mrs. Tremblay.

After one day of married life the couple agreed to part, and the young man left for his own home, leaving the bride behind. Mrs. Tremblay did not hear of the marriage until a fortnight afterwards, and immediately instituted proceedings with a view to having it cancelled, both young people acquiescing.

NEW DISTRICT NAMED PATRICIA

Toronto, April 23.—"Patricia" is the official name of the new territory or district—comprising in all about 148,000 square miles—that has been added to the Province of Ontario as the result of the Manitoba boundary settlement. The territory extends north from the Albany River to Hudson Bay.

Sir James Whitney made the announcement yesterday afternoon.

"Before this new district is divided up," said Sir James, "it must be given a name, and the name has been decided on. I have here the written consent of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and his daughter to the name being given."

Princess Patricia herself stated that she is very glad that her name should be associated with the increased dimensions and prosperity of the Province of Ontario.

BIG STRIKE OF ENGINEERS IN U.S.

Chief Warren S. Stone Announces That the Locomotive Engineers East of Chicago and North of the Potomac Will Quit Work To-day—Federal Officials Make Offer to Arbitrate and Men's Leaders Accept.

New York, April 23.—Warren S. Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, announced at 5.30 p.m. that a strike of engineers on fifty railroads, east of Chicago and north of the Potomac River, would go into effect 24 hours hence.

"The engineers' committee has decided that its 52 men would start for their respective points to-night," Mr. Stone said last night, "and that a strike will be called in 36 hours. This will allow 24 hours for the members to get back to their respective points; ten hours in which to put the strike order into effect and two hours in which to notify the different railroads of the intention to strike."

While a call for a strike has gone forth, there is still hope of a fairly speedy settlement, provided the railroads show a disposition to accept arbitration.

After the notice had been given by Chief Warren S. Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, he received an offer from Charles F. Neil, labor commissioner, and Justice Knapp of the United States Commerce Court, to arbitrate the differences, and Chief Stone recommended to the men's committee that the proposal be accepted.

The engineers' committee of fifty voted to accept the proposal of Messrs. Knapp and Neil for mediation. The formal announcement will be made to-day.

At the time Mr. Stone gave out the statement he had not received any official word from the railway managers' committee, which had been in session nearly all day considering the engineers' strike vote, but was adjourned at 5 o'clock last night without having decided to concede the engineers' demand for an increase in wages to about 18 per cent.

Commissioner of Labor Charles P. Neil, and Justice Knapp of the U. S. Commerce Court, were here last night with the hope of getting both sides in the controversy to agree to mediation or arbitration, but it is said that the engineers are determined to go ahead with the strike. Stone accused the railroad managers of bad faith. He said that during the 48 hours' armistice the companies were getting ready to fill the places of strikers.

"We were courteous while they were what I would call arrogant in their attitude," he said.

It is understood that Mr. Stone will make his headquarters in New York City and issue at once an appeal for an assessment to finance the strike.

It is declared by Mr. Stone that 34,000 men will be affected by the strike order. Of these 25,700 are members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and about 6,500 are in the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen, who, the engineers declare, will join the strike. The rest are non-union men who, Chief Stone says, have joined in the strike vote passed by the brotherhood.

The fifty railroads affected have a mileage of about 50,000 miles, doing 52 per cent. of the railway traffic of the United States.

The include practically all but three of the railroads in the territory roughly described as east of Chicago and north of the Potomac River. The three exceptions are the Central Railroad of New Jersey, whose contract with the engineers does not expire until June 1, and the Central Vermont and Rutland Railroads, both of which are in Vermont, and which have a separate agreement with the men employed, so that the result will be their taking up the wage question directly with the men.

DIED FROM BATTLE WOUND

Special To The Review.

London, April 23—A Rome despatch states that Enver Bey, the greatest of all Turkish generals, died to-day at Mariut from gangrene, which developed from a wound, received in battle.

When a man says he prefers to live in the suburbs, it's a safe bet that his wife refuses to live in the city.

ABOLISHING THE BARS

Short Shift Being Given to Licenses in Province.

Toronto, April 23.—Licensed hotels throughout the province are fast decreasing in numbers. Stratford has just had its coterie of liencesed premises reduced from 15 to 10 by the action of the North Perth License Commissioners, in bringing into effect the bylaw to make this reduction, which was voted on by the people last January.

Those on whom the axe fell were the Dominion, the G.T.R. Restaurant, the Ontario and Victoria. These four were granted an extension to May 20, to sell out. The G.T.R. Restaurant has been a long time in existence and is a well-known rendezvous for railway men especially. The Albion is practically in this class, but has not a license at present. The application for license was adjourned for three months, which keeps alive the status of application in the event of some of the others defaulting by not making the necessary improvements during the three months' period that is allowed. Shop licenses continue as before.

The City of Kingston is also about to have ten licenses cut off. At present there are 25. A special bylaw was passed here as in Stratford, to make these reductions.

North Oxford License Commissioners have discontinued licenses at the G.T.R. station, Woodstock; at the Commercial Hotel, Embro, and at the Innerkip Hotel.

Ottawa, April 23.—A statement issued by the Civil Service Commission yesterday announces that in the forthcoming examination for entrance to the service, starting on May 1st, no women will be asked for in connection with the general work of the service.

The only positions for which women will be considered are stenographers and typists.

PUBLIC ARE BARRED FROM TITANIC INVESTIGATION

Special To The Review.

Washington, April 23—Owing to the tremendous crush of women and other curious people at the Titanic investigation, chairman Smith to-day adjourned to smaller quarters and excluded all except witnesses and members of the press.

Fourth officer Boxhall was ill this morning and third officer Pitman was called to stand. Major Peuchen, the Canadian witness, was present and is expected to be called shortly. Pitman said the weather was perfect from the start to the collision with the iceberg.

Dublin, April 23—With the unfurling of the green flag of Ireland and a tumultuous demonstration, the Nationalist convention to-day, formally accepted Asquith's Home Rule bill. Leader Redmond declared that under this bill, Dublin Castle with its evil and bloodstained traditions, would disappear. "The Irish would be a nation of fools not to accept it" he said.

OFFICIAL REPORT SAYS SEVENTY-SEVEN BODIES WERE RECOVERED

Special To The Review.

New York, April 23— The White Star Line was officially notified at nine fifteen this morning that seventy-seven bodies of the "Titanic" victims had been recovered, of which forty-two had been identified. The cableship Mackay Bennett, it was also stated, would remain on the scene till she has filled all of the hundred coffins.

Mackay-Bennett Has Identified Twenty-Seven Victims.

New York, April 23.—Twenty-seven bodies have been identified on the cable steamer Mackay-Bennett, according to information received here through wireless messages to the White Star Line offices. The list of 27 names contain none of several of the prominent men who perished unless it be that "George W. Widen," as sent by wireless, refers, as it is believed probable, George D. Widener of Philadelphia.

The original passenger lists of the Titanic do not mention "Widen," which apparently establishes the identity of the body as that of Mr. Widener, son of P. A. B. Widener, a director of the White Star Line. Mr. Widener's son Harry was also among the victims.

The list, as reviewed at the White Star Line offices, is as follows: D. M. Hoffman, Mrs. Alexander Robbins, Wm. H. Harbeck, Malcolm Johnson, A. J. Halverson, R. W. Ashe, Leslie Williams, A. H. Hayter, Jerry Monrose, Frederick Sutton, J. S. Gill, Ernest B. Tomlin, George Rosenshire, N. Marriott, John H. Chapman, W. Cilbine, H. Greenberg, Simon Sother, N. Colss Rasher, — Shea, George W. Widen, Raymon Artagaveytia, Nihil Schedib, Steward No. 76, Yosits Drazenoui, R. B. Att, Leslie Gilinski.

A number of the 27 names in the list do not check up with the Titanic's passenger list, which leads to the belief that a number of the bodies recovered are members of the Titanic's crew.

A wireless message after listing the names concluded "All preserved," presumably referring to the non-decomposed condition of the bodies.

"The patient can breathe its rich, balsamic fumes direct to the diseased spot.

"It is a remedy that treats and cures causes—prevents disease spreading.

"Reaches the innermost recesses of the throat, nose, bronchial tubes, and lungs.

"Alleviates chest soreness.

"Stops coughing instantly.

"Prevents bronchial irritations.

"Relieves clogged nostrils.

"Cures sniffles and nasal catarrh.

"Prevents La Grippe.

"Has proven itself a cure for weak lungs, loss of voice, speakers' sore throat, asthma, bronchitis, catarrh, coughs, colds, and winter ills."

Catarrhozone is unquestionably the world's greatest breathable cold, cough, and catarrh medicine, and being free from all drowsy drugs, entirely safe for children and old folks; it makes an ideal family remedy. The names of the jury that will make the awards are not given in the advertisement, and it has been represented that artists intending to compete would like to know who will be the judges in the competition.

It is now made public that the judges will be the Advisory Arts Council, whose members are Sir Edmund Walker, Toronto, Dr. Francis I. Shepperd, Montreal and Senator Arthur Boyce, Montreal.

The author of the best design will be given the commission for the work and the second best design will receive a prize of $1000.00

CONSERVATION OF LIFE

Conservation of natural resources is commendable, and the Government of Canada has begun an effort that is being pushed forward to learn the best means, and to apply them, to provide that the natural resources of the country shall not be wasted or exhausted. Upon these resources the sustenance and the comfort of the people depend. They are of great importance and expenditure upon the subject of their preservation is justified.

But might not more attention be given to the conservation of human life?

The Conservation Commission is doing something in this direction by its investigations of tuberculosis. There are, however, other ways in which many lives are lost and an adequate enquiry by competent persons might result in measures that would lessen the death roll.

Every year in America hundreds lose their lives on the railways. Employees and passengers are killed in accidents, and usually a coroner's inquest follows to ascertain if anyone is guilty of negligence. Similar enquiries are frequently held when an electric wire causes death, or a street railway accident cuts short a life or a number of lives. Accidents in factories are responsible for many deaths, and their causes are perhaps more frequently ventilated in a civil court that in any crown enquiry or prosecution.

Could not something more, and much more, be done to formulate regulations to prevent such lamentable accidents? They kill very many in a year, but because the whole number are not slain in one great catastrophe the public mind is not shocked and no concerted and concentrated effort is made to discover means to prevent them. The ordinary enquiries are entirely inefficient for the purpose. Those who conduct them have not the macinery necessary.

If it is wise—and it is—to appoint a commission and employ experts to conserve the natural resources it would surely be commendable to appoint a commission with competent experts to investigate why it is that so many lives are sacrificed in carrying on the ordinary business of the country. New regulations might be put in force as a result of such an enquiry, applicable to railways, steamboats, factories and street traffic that would reduce the toll taken by death by large numbers. It is the duty of the legislators to see that if a life is lost through carelessness, those depended upon the person killed receive compensation so far as monetary aid can compensate in such a case. But it would be much better to protect the lives. There are, of course, laws bearing on this matter. The accidents continue despite these laws, and if they can be made more efficient so as to conserve human life they should be, and unless it can be most clearly demonstrated that no commission, no experts, no enquiry can materially improve the conditions the investigation should be made.

CHURCHES AS INVESTMENTS

A complaint is made by the Calgary Standard that millions are invested in churches that are used only one day in the week. Certain it is that in other spheres of activity such sums of money would not be invested in any undertaking and allowed to lie six-sevenths of the time. When a manufacturer puts machinery in a factory he expects it to produce goods six days in the week. Not only that, but he insists that the product be up to the capacity of each machine. If a workman cannot or will not operate it so as to produce what should be got from it, he is displaced to make room for one more competent or more industrious. The investment is made to produce results, and only as results are produced is a return made upon the investment.

The case of investments in churches, however, may not be analagous. One day in the week is set apart for worship, and the churches provide the accommodation for the worshipping assemblies. They are also utilized during the week to some extent. But it may be that they could be used with advantage more than they are. With this in view, the institutional church has sprung up in large cities, where reading and amusement rooms are provided in connection with the church buildings and kept open every day and evening. In the smaller places perhaps, the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations take the place of the institutional churches, for those associations are maintained by the united efforts of adherents of the different churches, and provide places for the instruction and entertainment of young people during the week when the churches are not open. At the same time there would be an advantage in having young people, and older people who have not homes in which to spend their time, become familiar with the churches during the week as a comfortable home-place, and those responsible for church management might learn something from the business mans' desire to reap the full benefit from an investment.

NOTE AND COMMENT

Dr. Beattie Nesbitt differs from Theodore Roosevelt. He does not want to come back.

If you wish to keep up with the times in Peterborough this summer you should at once begin to study the language of baseball.

Spring modesty in holding back does not help the roads, and bad roads do not help business.

The continual dropping of water will wear away a stone, but a life lost here and there will not start an investigation, although the aggregate loss may be nearly as great as in a catastrophe.

At a convention of the Conservatives of Quebec West, held last evening, Charles Smith, a local advocate, was chosen to oppose Hon. J. C. Kaine in the coming provincial elections.

Four persons were burned to death early Sunday morning in a fire which destroyed the residence of Robert Adamson, a farmer, near Shelbrook, Sask. The dead are: Hazel Naomi, aged 8; Cecil, aged 6; Horace, aged 3, and John Huhlban, the hired man.

Profiting by the lesson of the Titanic disaster, it was officially announced yesterday that the Canadian Marine Department will institute a thorough inspection of all Canadian steamers and ships coming to Canadian ports, with particular reference to their life-saving equipment.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, April 22.—Business over the cable in Manitoba spring wheat was dull and bids out of line. There was a fair demand from exporters for oats for all-rail shipment, and some purchases of extra No. 1 feed were made at 50¼c, and No. 1 feed at 49¼c, track. Manitoba tough feed wheat was offered at 64½c, track, but the demand was quiet. Export trade in flour was slow, and the domestic demand was also off a little, but the tone of the market is very firm. Demand for bran and shorts is good. Rolled oats quiet. Butter quiet, with prices tending lower. Cheese dull and easy. Demand for eggs good. Provisions fairly active and firm.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, April 22.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 81 cars, comprising 1835 cattle, 324 hogs, 50 sheep and 36 calves.

Exporters

Coughlin & Co. bought 100 export steers for the S. & S. Company, averaging 1263 lbs., at $7.30 per cwt.

Alexander McIntosh bought 136 export steers from John Shamburg & Sons. Export bulls at $5.25 to $6.

Butchers

Butchers' cattle were in some instances as high as exporters. Best butchers of heavy weights, from 100 lbs. up, sold at $6.50 to $7.30; from 850 lbs. up to 950 lbs., $6 to $6.25, and from 600 lbs. up to 800 lbs., $5 to $5.25; cows, $4.50 to $6.50; bulls, $4.60 to $5.25.

Milkers and Springers.

Trade in milkers and springers remained about the same, few being on sale. Prices paid were from $40 to $60 each.

Veal Calves.

Receipts of calves were light, with prices ranging from $4 to $8 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs

Receipts were light, with market firm. Sheep, ewes, $5.50 to $6.50; yearlings, $6.50 to $9 per cwt.; spring lambs, $4 to $8 each.

Hogs

W. J. Johnston of Gunns (Limited) reported hog prices unchanged, at $8.50 for selects, fed and watered; $8.15, fed and watered, and $8.75 weighed off cars.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 22.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market the receipts of live stock for the week ending April 20 were 1200 cattle, 150 sheep and lambs, 3050 hogs and 2600 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale were 500 cattle, 50 sheep and lambs, 2000 hogs and 600 calves.

Owing to the continued small supplies of cattle coming forward, the increasing scarcity of good to choice stock, and the higher prices drovers have been forced to pay thruout the country, a much stronger feeling prevailed in the market this morning, and prices scored a further advance of 25c to 50c per 100 pounds. The attendance of buyers was fair, and, as they all wanted some beef, the demand was fairly good, and supplies were ample to fill all immediate requirements. This would not have been the case if the packers had all been in the market for their supplies, but some of them went to Toronto last week and bought several carloads, which, they stated, looked cheap to-day compared with the prices ruling on spot. A few full loads of steers weighing 1025 to 1050 pounds each sold at $7.35, and in small lots as high as $7.50 to $7.75 per 100 pounds.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for live hogs this morning, the supply being ample to fill all requirements, but the feeling was strong, and prices were fully maintained at the advance noted last Wednesday. The demand from packers was good, and an active trade was done, with sales of selected lots at $9.40 to $9.50 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

A weaker feeling prevailed in the market for calves, owing to the liberal supplies coming forward, and prices ruled lower, but at the decline the demand was good, as the consumption of veal is increasing considerably on account of the high prices for beef and pork. The trade in sheep and lambs was very quiet, owing to the small offerings. A few lambs sold at from $3 to $5 each.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.50 to $7.75; do., medium, $6 to $7; do., common, $5 to $5.75; do., choice cows, $6 to $6.25; do., medium, $4.75 to $5.50; do., bulls, $5 to $6.75; milkers, choice, each, $75 to $80; do., common and medium, each, $60 to $70; springers, $40 to $50.

Sheep, ewes, $5 to $5.25; bucks and culls, $4.50 to $4.75. Lambs, $7.25 to $7.50.

Hogs, f.o.b., $9.40 to $9.50.

Calves, $1.50 to $7.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, April 22.—Cattle—Receipts, 4125 head; market active and strong; prime steers, $8.25 to $8.50; shipping steers, $7 to $7.75; butcher grades, $6.25 to $7.50; heifers, $4.25 to $7; cows, $3.50 to $5.50; bulls, $3 to $6; milch cows and springers, $20 to $68.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 15,000 head; market active, 25c to 35c higher; choice clipped lambs, $7.50 to $7.85; wool lambs, $7 to $8.90; cull to fair, $5 to $7.85; wool lambs, $7 to $8.90; cull to fair, $5 to $5.25; yearlings, $6 to $6.75; sheep, $3 to $6.25.

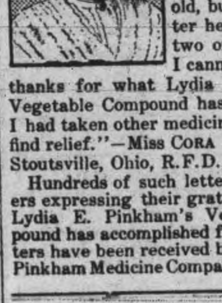
HOW GIRLS MAY AVOID PERIODIC PAINS

The Experience of Two Girls Here Related For The Benefit of Others.

Rochester, N. Y.—"I have a daughter 13 years old who has always been very healthy until recently when she complained of dizziness and cramps every month, so bad that I would have to keep her home from school and put her to bed to get relief.

"After giving her only two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound she is now enjoying the best of health. I cannot praise your Compound too highly. I want every good mother to read what your medicine has done for my child."—Mrs. RICHARD N. DUNHAM, 311 Exchange St., Rochester, N.Y.

Stoutsville, Ohio.—"I suffered from headaches, backache and was very irregular. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and before I had taken the whole of two bottles I found relief. I am only sixteen years old, but I have better health than for two or three years. I cannot express my thanks for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I had taken other medicines but did not find relief."—Miss CORA B. FOSNAUGH, Stoutsville, Ohio, R.F.D., No. 1.



Hundreds of such letters from mothers expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for their daughters have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Cynthia's Chauffeur

By LOUIS TRACY

Copyright by McLeod & Allen, Toronto

The chauffeur snapped out the word without turning. He was a man devoid of faith, or hope, or charity.

"Can I help?"

"Can you h—l!" came the surly response.

Thereupon, many viscounts would have swept on into Piccadilly without further parley—not so Medenham. He scrutinized the soldierly figure, the half-averted face.

"You must be hard hit, Simmonds, before you would answer me in that fashion," said he quietly.

Simmonds postively jumped when he heard his name. He wheeled round, raised his cap, and broke into stuttering excuse.

"I beg your lordship's pardon—I hadn't the least notion——"

These two had not met since they discussed Boer trenches and British generals during a momentary halt on the Tugela slope of Spion Kop. Medenham remembered the fact, and forgave a good deal on account of it.

"I have seen you look far less worried under a plunging fire from a pom-pom," he said cheerily. "Now, what is it? Wires out of order?"

"No, my lord. That wouldn't bother me very long. It's a regular smash this time—transmission shaft snapped."

"Why?"

"I was run into by a railway van, and forced against a street refuge."

"Well, if it was not your fault——"

"Oh, I can claim damages right enough. I have plenty of witnesses. Even the driver of the van could only say that one of his horses slipped. I hate to disappoint my customers, and this accident may cost me three hundred pounds, and a business of my own into the bargain."

"By gad! That sounds rather stiff. What's the hurry?"

"This is my own car, my lord. Early in the spring I was lucky enough to fall in with a rich American. I was driving for a company then, but he offered me three hundred pounds, money down, for a three months' contract. Straightway I bought this car for five hundred, and it s half paid for. Now the gentleman writes from Paris that I am to take his daughter and another lady on a thousand miles' run for ten days, and he says he is prepared to hire me and the car for the balance of another period of three months on the same terms."

"But the ladies will be reasonable when you explain matters."

"Lades are never reasonable, my lord—especially young ones. I have met Miss Vanrenen only once, but she struck me as one who was very much accustomed to having her own way. And she has planned this tour to the last minute. Any other day I might have hired a car, and picked up my own somewhere on the road, but on Derby Day and in fine weather——"

Simmonds spread wide his hands in sheer inability to find words that would express the hopelessness of retrieving his shattered fortunes. Dale was fidgeting, fingering taps and screws unnecessarily, but Medenham was pondering his former trooper's plight. He refused to admit that the position was quite so bad as it was painted.

"Oh, come now," said he, "I'll give you a tow to the nearest repair shop, and a word from me will expedite the business. Meanwhile, you must jump into a hansom and appeal to the sympathies of Miss—Vanrenen, is it?"

"No use, my lord," was the stubborn answer. "I am very much obliged to you, but I would not dream of detaining you."

"Simmonds, you are positively cantankerous. I can spare the time."

"The first race is at 1.30 my lord," muttered Dale, greatly daring.

Medenham laughed.

"You, too?" he cried. "Someone has given you a tip, I suppose?"

Dale flushed under this direct analysis of his feelings. He grinned sheepishly.

"I am told that Eyot can't lose the first race, my lord," he said.

"Ah! And how much do you mean to speculate?"

"A sovereign, my lord."

"Hand it over. I will lay your starting price."

Somewhat taken aback, though nothing said or done by Viscount Medenham could really surprise him, Dale's leather garments creaked and groaned while he produced the coin which his master duly pocketed.

"Now, Simmonds," went on the pleasant, lazy voice, "you see how I have comforted Dale by taking his money; won't you tell me what is the real obstacle that blocks the way? Are you afraid to face this imperious young lady?"

"No, my lord. No man can provide against an accident of this sort. But Miss Vanrenen will lose all confidence in me. The arrangement was that to-day's spin should be a short one—to Brighton. I was to take the ladies to Epsom in time for the Derby, and then we were o run quietly to the Metropole. Miss Vanrenen made such a point of seeing the race that she will be horribly disappointed. There is an American horse entered——"

"By Gad, another gambler!"

Simmonds laughed grimly.

"I don't think Miss Vanrenen knows much about racing, my lord, but the owner of Grimalkin is a friend of her father's, and he is confident about winning this year."

"I am beginning to understand. You are in a fix of sorts, Simmonds."

"Yes, my lord."

"And what is your plan? I suppose you have one."

"I have sent for a messenger, my lord. When he arrives I shall write —Oh, here he is."

Viscount Medenham descended leisurely and lit a cigarette. Dale, the stoic, folded his arms and looked at the press of vehicles passing the end of the street. Vivid memories of Lord Medenham's chivalrous courtesy—his lordship's dashed tomfoolery he called it—warned him that life was about to assume new interests.

The boy messenger, summoned telephonically by a sympathetic maidservant in a neighboring house, guessed that the gentleman standing on the pavement owned the "motor-car" to which he had been directed. Here were two cars, but the boy did not hesitate. He saluted.

"Messenger, sir," he said.

"This way," intervened Simmonds curtly.

"No. I want you," said Medenham. "You know Sevastopolo's, the cigarette shop in Bond Street?"

"Yes, sir."

"Take this card there, and ask him to dispatch the order at once." Meanwhile he was writing: Kindly send 1,000 Salonikas to 91 Cavendish Square."

Simmonds looked anxious. He was not a smoothspoken fellow, but he did not wish to offend Lord Medenham.

"Would your lordship mind if I sent the boy to the Savoy Hotel first?" he asked nervously. "It is rather late, and Miss Vanrenen will be expecting me."

"What time are you due at the Savoy?"

"We were to start at twelve o'clock, but the ladies' luggage had to be strapped on, and—"

"Ah, the deuce! That sounds formidable."

"Of course they must stow everything into the canvas trunks I supplied, my lord."

Medenham stooped and examined the screws which fastened an iron grid at the back of the broken-down vehicle.

"Whip open the tool box, Dale, and transfer that arrangement to my car," he said briskly. "Make it fit somehow. I don't approve of damaged paintwork, nor of weight behind the driving-wheels for that matter, but time presses, and the ladies might shy at a request to repack their belongings into my kit-bags, even if I were carrying them. Now, Simmonds, give me the route, if you know it, and hand over your road maps. I mean to take your place until your car is put right. Wire me where to expect you. You ought to be ship-shape in three days at the utmost."

"My lord—" began the overwhelmed Simmonds.

"I'll see you hanged as high as Haman before I hand over my Mercury to you, if that is what you are thinking of," said Medenham sharply. "Why, man, she is built like a watch. It would take you a month to understand her. Now, you boy, be off to Sevastopolo's. Where can I buy a chauffeur's kit, Simmonds?"

"Your lordship is really too kind. I couldn't think of permitting it," muttered Simmonds.

"What, then—do you refuse my assistance?"

"It isn't that, my lord. I am awfully grateful—"

"Are you afraid that I shall run off with Miss Vanrenen—hold her to ransom—send Black Hand letters to her father, and that sort of thing?"

"From what little I have seen of Miss Vanrenen she is much more likely to run off with you, my lord. But—"

"You're growing incoherent, Simmonds. For goodness' sake tell me where I am to go. You can safely leave all the rest to me, and we haven't a minute to lose if I am to secure any sort of a decent motoring kit before I turn up at the hotel. Pull yourself together, man. Action front and fire! Guns unlimbered and first range-finder dispatched in nineteen seconds —eh, what?"

Simmonds squared his shoulders. He had been a driver in the Royal Artillery before he joined Viscount Medenham's troop of Imperial Yeomanry. There was no further argument. Dale, Oriental in phlegm now that Eyot was safely backed, was already unscrewing the luggage carrier.

Half an hour later, the Mercury curled with sinuous grace out of the busy Strand into the courtyard of the Savoy Hotel. The enclosure snorted with motors, the air was petrolise, all the world of the hotel was going, or had already gone, to Epsom.

One quick glance at the lines of traffic showed Hedenham that the Swiss Rear-Admiral on duty would not allow him to remain an unnecessary instant in front of the actual doorway. He swung his car to the exit side, crept in behind a departing taxicab, and grabbed a hurrying boy in buttons.

"You listen to me, boy," he said.

The boy remarked that his hearing was perfect.

"Well, go to Miss Vanrenen and say that her motor is waiting. Seize a porter, and do not leave him until he has brought two canvas trunks from the lady's rooms. Help him to strap them on the grid, and I'll give each of you half-a-crown."

The boy vanished. Never before had chauffeur addressed him so convincingly.

Medenham, standing by the side of the car, was deep in the contours of a road map of Sussex when a sweet if somewhat petulant voice, apparently at his elbow, complained that its owner could not see Simmonds anywhere.

He turned instantly. A slim, straight-figured girl, wearing a dust-cloak and motor veil, had come out from the Savoy Court doorway and was scrutinizing every automible in sight. Near her was a short, stout woman whose personality seemed to be strangely familiar to Medenham. He never forgot anyone, and this lady was certainly not one of his acquaintances; nevertheless, her features, her robin-like

Replaces "Flying Post."

Ottawa, April 23.—The Postoffice Department announced yesterday that it had decided to meet the request of the Toronto Board of Trade, which sometime ago made representations that discontinuance of the train known as the "Flying Post" would seriously inconvenience merchants in the sending of mails.

The deputation pointed out that it did not ask for the continuance of the "Flying Post" for the delivery of the newspapers, but requested that, as the business men found it very convenient, some arrangement be made to have mails collected up to 10 or 10.30 p.m. in Toronto, despatched the same night.

This is what the Department has arranged. Beginning on May 1, these mails will be placed on the 11.20 Grand Trunk train, and early in June the time of this train will be changed to leave Toronto at 11.40 p.m.

Dream Causes a Murder.

Georgetown, Ky., April 23.—Just as Isaac Southworth was inserting his latchkey in the door of his home near Lytle York, Ky., after returning from a fox hunt early Sunday morning, his elder brother, George, awoke from a dream about burglars, and seized his shotgun and fired through the window blind, killing him instantly.

Gregory of Tours speaks of church windows of colored glass. Glass was introduced into England so long ago as the middle of the seventh century, although the manufacture was not established there until about the year 1550.

ZAM-BUK SAVED MY ARM, AND WOULD HAVE SAVED MY FINGER IF I HAD USED IT."

Mr. John Evans of 87 Lawrence St., Halifax, N.S. makes this statement. He says:—"Three years ago I had a sore on my finger, which turned to blood-poisoning. We tried various remedies, but the finger got worse, and we called in a doctor. After two or three days he lanced it, and came every day for three months. My finger and hand were then in a terrible condition. The poison had spread to the palm of the hand, and I was almost frantic with the pain. I called in a second doctor, and after a conference the two doctors decided on an operation.

The finger was amputated, but the wound would not heal. The blood poison spread throughout the hand, and along the whole length of my arm. A second operation was performed, and some of the tendons taken out of my hand. Even this did not end the trouble and the wounds left by the operation would not heal. In a short time it was clear that the poison was extending right up my arm, at intervals along which great lumps were raised.

This was my condition when I tried Zam-Buk. In three days the pain was reduced so that I could obtain some sleep. Within a fortnight the lumps on my arm had disappeared. As I continued with the Zam-Buk the open wound on my hand and the stump of my finger began to heal. The doctors all along noted what Zam-Buk was doing, and it was clear to them that Zam-Buk was effecting a cure where their methods had failed. By the time I had used less than a dozen boxes of Zam-Buk my hand was completely healed. I am quite sure Zam-Buk saved my arm."

STATEMENT ON OATH

Mr. Evans has made a sworn statement on oath embodying the above facts before a Commissioner of the Supreme Court.

THE MIGHTY CODFISH.

It Thrives In Spite of Wholesale Capture For Centuries.

The cod is probably the most prolific of all sea fish, though its habitat does not extend over as large an area as other species. The cod is found only in northern waters and will live and thrive only in certain temperatures. Some day, owing to the wonderful asset which Newfoundland possesses in her cod fishery, she is destined to be the great fish depot of the world.

It is not alone on the great "banks," many miles off her coast, that cod are found in countless millions, but around the whole island—on the "ledges" and "grounds" off the capes and promontories that jut into the Atlantic as well as on the Labrador coast for a stretch of 1,000 miles.

In these regions you require no hatcheries to aid the wonderful fecundity of nature. Indeed, it is doubtful if you require any laws or regulations to protect these fisheries unless it be in the shoal waters of the bay.

Notwithstanding that for 300 years the fisheries of these waters have been prosecuted by the rival fishermen of two hemispheres, the largest catch of cod ever taken on the Newfoundland and Labrador coasts was that secured in 1909, the yield being estimated in weight at 1,800,000 quintals, or 201,000,000 pounds, to which may be added 200,000 quintals—the quantity locally consumed in Newfoundland during and after the fishing season.

The value of the fish alone, without any regard to the byproducts—oil, roes, skin, offal, etc.—is $10,000,000.—Wide World Magazine.

MORTALS SUCH AS WE COULD NOT LIVE ON MARS

Scientific Problem Dealt With In an Interesting Manner.

Owing to the absence of the President and Vice-President, at the regular meeting of the Astronomical Society in the Collegiate Institute last night, Dr. Marsh occupied the chair. Mr. Henry Carveth gave some accurate reports of the interesting observations he had made recently on the sun, and on the Orion Nebulae.

Dr. Marsh made some remarks on the sun spots referred to by Mr. Carveth and gave an account of the eclipse of the sun that occurred on April 17, and showed two photographs which he had taken at that time.

He then called on the speaker of the evening, Mr. T. C. Elliot, who gave a very interesting and instructive paper on the planet Mars, dealing particularly with the possibility of its being inhabited. He accepted the Nebular theory as to its origin and showing that owing to it being a smaller planet than the earth it had entered its state of old age earlier than the planet we lived on. He demonstrated that the gravitation of Mars is considerably less than that of the earth, and that the atmosphere of Mars was attenuated to a much greater extent—so much so that were there people on Mars such as we are, their blood vessels would burst and immediate death follow. Owing to the condition of Mars the temperature changed rapidly from one extreme to the other, it being estimated that the thermometer would fall below zero on a summer night and yet the temperature be very high during the day.

Mr. Elliot described in eloquent terms the sunset which we observe on earth but explained that, owing to the lack of moisture and atmosphere on Mars no such spectacle could be seen were there human beings on Mars. Also the lack of oxygen would make it impossible for them to light a fire or cook their food and the low atmospheric pressure would also prevent such necessary undertakings.

Mr. Elliot's lecture showed a wide range of reading and his conclusion was in coincidence and conformity with that of the greatest astronomers of the world, in that no mortals such as we could exist on Mars.

At the conclusion a number of questions were asked and handled in a satisfactory manner by the chairman.

There was a large attendance and an interesting meeting was the result.

GARBAGE COLLECTION FEES WILL BE ADDED TO TAXES

Motion to Amend the By-law as Petitioned for, was Lost.

A petition from F. S. Schneider and others was read at the City Council session last night, asking that the charges for the collection of garbage be not placed on the collector's roll. A motion that the by-law for a system of garbage collection be amended to provide that the charges be collected quarterly in advance from occupants of premises, and that the Property Committee be authorized to engage some one to collect the money, if the Sanitary Inspector cannot do it, or engage assistance for that purpose, was lost. The original decree stands.

The by-law providing $5,000 for improvements at the police station was amended last evening to make the amount $5,100. The amendment passed its three readings without opposition.

The chairman of the Property Committee was authorized to have the land added to King Edward Park levelled.

LIQUOR FOUND IN BATHROOM SO BLACKLISTER TESTIFIED

Police Officers Tell of Watching Boot and Shoe Repair Shop.

N. Penrose pleaded guilty at Police Court this morning, to the charge of being drunk in a public place. His Worship imposed a fine of $2 to be paid in ten days.

William Clark, was charged with being drunk. He also will pay $2 in 10 days, or spend 10 days on the hill in case of default.

BLACKLIST CASE

William Anthony was charged with being drunk while on the black list. He was found in his cobbling shop under the influence of liquor, but had a very poor memory as to who gave him the drink. The only explanation that he gave, was that he found it in the bath-room on his premises. The Magistrate remarked that the water-works must be improving, if he could obtain liquor there. He stoutly denied that an employe in his shop had brought him the liquor, and as no further evidence could be obtained, the Magistrate decided to remand the case for one week to see if Anthony's memory would improve.

CHARGED WITH SUPPLYING

McIntosh MacRoberts answered to the charge of supplying liquor to a blacklister on April 22nd, and pleaded not guilty to the charge.

Detective Newhall gave evidence to the effect, that last night about 7 o'clock, he was on duty watching William Anthony's shop. He saw the defendant make three trips to Nixon's Hotel and return to the shop. In company with P.C. Meharry, he proceeded to enter the place and met MacRoberts coming down the stairs which led to the shop. "We made him return with us up-stairs and we found Holmes and Anthony in a drunken state," said the officer. "Anthony was attempting to hide in the bath-room but was located by Meharry. We also found a number of whiskey and beer bottles, and the wrappers which fell from MacRoberts pockets would correspond to those which the bottles would have formerly been wrapped in. I called P. C. Meagher, and we took the prisoners to the station."

P. C. Meharry verified these statements.

Mr. MacRoberts was placed on the stand and denied giving liquor to a blacklister. He stated that he went to the repair shop to have a boot mended at 11.45 a.m. and that business was so brisk that he decided to leave and returned at 3 p.m. when the boot was fixed. "Mr. Anthony was out and I returned at 5 p.m. to write a short sketch of the Fenian Raid veterans for him," explained the witness. "I did not leave the workroom until 7 p.m., and then I went to an adjoining room. Both Holmes and Anthony were drunk at that time, but I do not know where they obtained the whiskey, as I only went out twice and did not return with any liquor."

The police have some information regarding MacRoberts, which is not to his credit. It is said he failed to remain a guest at one local hotel, because he did not settle the account against him. He is connected with a publishing firm in Toronto.

Holmes and Anthony were placed in the witness stand, but could not recollect of receiving liquor from the defendent or of seeing him bring it into the shop.

JUDGMENT RESERVED

Magistrate Dumble considered the evidence, but could not understand how MacRoberts became connected in the affair, as his two companions were not intimate friends of his. The evidence was strong against him, His Worship held, so he decided to reserve judgment until to-morrow.

GOOD REPORTS ON WORK AT ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

Receipts From All Sources Were $6000 - $900 for Missions —Sexton Receives Increase—Memorial Resolutions to The Departed.

The adjourned vestry meeting of St. John's church was held last night at eight o'clock, with the rector, the Rev. Canon Davidson, in the chair.

Reports were received from the Sunday school, the choir, and certain other societies, which showed most faithful and enthusiastic work. The financial report for the year was presented by Mr. W. F. Johnston, and showed receipts from all sources to be over $6,000, of which $900 was given for missions.

The necessary expenses for the year have been unusually heavy, including the cost of much permanent work, and it was foreshadowed that other permanent improvements would shortly be necessary, including the reshingling of the church and the renewal of the heating system. Words of high praise and appreciation were expressed of the work of the retiring church wardens, Messrs. Johnston and Stratton, who had given most effective service, and a resolution of hearty thanks was enthusiastically carried.

The salary of Mr. John Butcher was increased by $50, on account of his faithful services and increased duties in connection with the chimes.

The vestry stood as memorial resolutions were passed in reference to the late Dr. R. P. Boucher and Mr. Wm. Hinchliffe, who had occupied official positions.

A general discussion took place on improvements to the buildings and the ventilation of the church, which will be speedily dealt with.

After passing a vote of thanks and appreciation to the chairman, the meeting adjourned.

REPORT OF THE PARISH.

The general report of the parish was given by the rector on Sunday morning, showing a very large amount of work accomplished during the past year. During the year Rev. Mr. Davidson had paid upwards of 1,300 visits, and had an increased number of interviews. Besides dealing with many confidential matters, a very considerable portion of time had been spent upon non-church-goers, and transients, in the alleviation of distress which was satisfactory to the congregation.

Notable events of the year were recounted, including the installation and public dedication of the chimes, and the seventy-fifth anniversary of the opening of the church. It was understood that about $50 remained as a balance in the chimes fund, but this was insufficient for the erection of a permanent tablet in the church porch. During the year there have been several missionary events, and the formation of the St. John's Association, which was helping laymen to realize and express their participation in the church's work.

In conclusion the rector remarked that the figures and statements presented were only valuable in so far as they indicated progress being made in the main object of the church's mission, which was that of glorifying God, saving lost souls, and gradually training men for a higher and better life here and hereafter.

AT ST. LUKE'S.

A large number attended the adjourned vestry meeting of St. Luke's church last night, when the rector gave his annual address, and the reports of the various societies were presented.

The reports showed a flourishing state of affairs, financially and otherwise.

Mr. E. A. Peck was elected as representative to the Nicholls Hospital, Mr. R. H. Turner to the Protestant Home, and Mr. S. Gaskins to the Charity Board.

St. George's Day

At noon to-day the People's Chimes were rung in honor of St. George England's Patron Saint, and also on account of this being St. George's Day, the flag over St. John's Church which has been flying half mast in memory of the Titanic victims, was raised to full mast, in which position it has been flying all day. Similar recognition of the day is shown by the Sons of England and Turners.

ABOUT THE FAIREN CASE

Mr. Burnham said to-day that the small portion of the evidence given in last night's Examiner does not fairly represent, as may be readily supposed, the testimony given before the Commissioner in the Fairen case, which is not supposed to be published as yet, for the enquiry is not public until the Minister has made his finding. The evidence of Mr. Burnham was merely to the effect that Mr. Fairen was mistaken in saying that he did not drive men, as alleged, to Ashburnham on the registration days If the records show that the men driven over to Ashburnham on those days by Mr. Fairen were sent over for the purpose of doing work, then Mr. Fairen's evidence in that particular will be greatly strengthened, but if the records show that no men were sent on those days, or near those dates, as specifically alleged in Mr. Fairen's evidence, then his evidence will be greatly weakened, and notwithstanding this sharp practice of the defendant in publishing a small portion of the evidence, it may transpire that the records do not back up Mr. Fairen at all, in which event the statement in the Examiner will look very foolsih.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY'S GREAT COLONIZATION SCHEME

The Canadian Pacific Railway has adopted a great scheme for Colonization of the Company's land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, which will doubtless prove a further attraction to farmers in the United States who are now living on rented farms. In many of the middle states of the United States, particularly Iowa, Illinois and Michigan, there are a large number of farmers living on rented farms, and paying rents of from $6.00 to $12.00 per acre per farm, and the scheme of the C.P.R. will prove one of interest to this class of farmer.

As a class these farmers have not much capital, but large families, good equipment and large valuable agricultural experience. It has been found hard to move these people to Western Canada, because after they are required to pay their first instalment on the purchased land, they have not sufficient capital to provide necessary buildings to house their families and stock. Farmers of this class the C.P.R. believe will prove most successful in the west, and to enable the Land Department of the Company, the following scheme has been adopted:

In order to carry out to a successful issue in selecting applicants only married men with families actually engaged in farming a rented farm will be taken. These, of their own free will, will be required to own, free of encumbrance, sufficient furniture, horses, cows, other live stock and farm implements to enable them to go into immediate occupation of, and improve their farms. They will be required to have sufficient cash capital to make their first payment (one-tenth) on land purchased, and to cover cost of upkeep of their families for one year. Further, the applicant will be required to make a personal visit to the west and make their own selection of a farm. To applicants having these qualifications and complying with the above requirements, it is proposed to make a loan of $2,000 for a period of ten years at 6 per cent. interest per annum, on the following conditions: The full amount of the loan will be added to the list price of the land and repaid annually with instalments principal and interest on land contract. The amount of the loan will be expended in completing the following improvements: The erection of a house from one of the standard plans of houses erected by the Company on "ready made" farms; the erecting of a barn from one of the standard barns erected by the Company on "ready made" farms; the fencing of the farm providing a well and pump; the cultivation and cropping of, at least, fifty acres of the farm.

It is proposed that the buildings on the farms shall be erected by the Company through the organization now employed in erecting buildings on "ready made" farms, but that in connection with other work, the farmer and his family shall be as fully employed as possible and paid current rate for the work done. On this work the C.P.R. propose to spend half a million of dollars, which will enable the company to move two hundred and fifty farmers on this basis as an experiment, and this will result in getting the class of colonist wanted for Canada.

TWO ENGLISH BOXERS SUPPOSED TO HAVE GONE DOWN WITH TITANIC

New York, April 23.—Among the passengers who are supposed to have sank with the Titanic are two prominent English fighters who were on their way to this country for battles. They are Dave Bowen, a lightweight, and Leslie Williams, a featherweight, both from Cardiff, Wales.

Their manager in this country received a cablegram from them the day the Titanic started, saying they were sailing on the Titanic and for him to meet them on their arrival.

WALK TO BE BUILT TO THE BASEBALL GROUNDS

It was deputation night at the City Council session last evening. On behalf of the Peterborough Baseball Club, Mr. W. H. Denham and Mr. W. S. Davidson were on hand to urge the Council to construct a sidewalk from Hunter street, leading into the Riverside Park grounds, where the games are to be played this season.

Mr. Denham stated that a great many citizens had subscribed to the Club, and the ball team was being organized with the idea of bringing Peterborough to the notice of the people of Canada. As the Club contemplated using Riverside Park as a playing field, he would like to ask the city to place there some sort of sidewalk from Hunter street into the park gate. The Board of Works might possibly build a wooden walk, say eight feet wide. While the road leading in was a private right of way, Mr. Denham stated that the Club would guarantee to obtain permission to lay the walk.

Mr. Denham stated that a large quantity of lumber in good condition was obtainable at the mill, which would do away with the buying of absolutely new material.

On motion of Ald. Morgan and Brown, the request was referred to the chairman of the Board of Works with power to act.—Carried.

EKOS WIN BASKETBALL LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP

The Hustlers and Eko Club battled for the City Basketball League championship at the Y.M.C.A. gym. last night before a large and enthusiastic crowd, and after a very fast and interesting game, succeeded in again landing the "Beacon." The Ekos won principally because of better all-round team play, which has been the outstanding feature of their playing all through the season. The Hustlers certainly were true to their name and hustled around in fine shape, but their inability to convert foul throws cost them the game. At half time the score stood 8 to 12 in favor of the Eko's, and the final score 23 to 25. Teams—Eko Club (champions) A. Hall and McArthur, forwards; S. Canniff, centre (captain); D. Fleming and F. Turner, guards. Hustlers—F. Cressman, A. Flowers (captain); forwards, H. Willis, centre; D. Loomis and S. Hall, guards. Referee, Thompson; umpire, Sisson.

SIXTEEN MEN TO REPORT TO TEMPLIN

Manager Templin arranged for the transportation of his players to-day, and 16 men will report about the first of May. He has thirteen landing here in a bunch, and the other three will follow directly. He did intend to carry 18 men, but released Kelly, a catcher and a first baseman.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

Although the weatherman is anything but cheering in disposition today, the first of the Hamilton Canadian League players will arrive in the city on Wednesday with the veteran Joe Keenan heading the bunch. A letter was received from Joe this morning, and the former London manager expressed himself as being well satisfied with the chance to play with the Kolts this year. "If I couldn't lead a team against him there is nothing else I would rather do than play with Knotty Lee," was the way he put it. The veteran does not round into shape as quickly as he once did, and for this reason he will be one of the first, if not the first, to land in the city.—Hamilton Spectator.

NO GAMES ON SUNDAY

Toronto, April 23.—Owing to the fact that no Sunday ball games can be played by the Ottawa Club, on their Hull grounds, the Canadian League schedule, which President Fitzgerald had prepared for publication, will have to be revised. It is likely that a special meeting of the league will be called for this week at Hamilton to go into the matter.

Great interest is being taken by the Canadian people in connection with the new seashore resorts at New London, Conn., that will be reached by special train service this summer over the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont railways. A handsome booklet has been issued describing this popular locality, and a copy may be had free by application to A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto, Ont.

PARIS HAS A SWEET TOOTH.

A Poet to Whom Candy Brought Better Results Than His Rimes.

The best business in Paris is said to be that of the well established and popular confectioner, and this fact has been recognized, it is said, since the days of Napoleon III. and his natural brother, the Duke de Morny. "The duke," says Le Cri de Paris, "had a weakness for writing vaudevilles and often asked the counsel of Siraudin, who was a skillful collaborator of Clairville.

"But the theater brought no riches to Siraudin. One day Morny said to him: 'My friend, I want to see thee in a better situation. The idea comes to me to put thee in commerce. What dost thou say to it?'

"Siraudin received this proposition joyfully, but what line of trade should he choose? Morny and Siraudin set out on the principle that the best business was evidently the one in which there were fewest failures. They conscientiously scanned the bulletin of declarations of bankruptcy. All the trades were represented there—all except one; that was the confectioner, and Morny gave to Siraudin the necessary capital to establish himself as a merchant of bonbons. Siraudin ingeniously conciliated the lyric muse. He wrapped his pralines, his sugar plums and his chocolates in kiss papers, each inclosing his printed verses. Morny did better than establish him. He frequented his shop. As the duke was the king of the world of fashion, he drew all Paris by his example, and the fortune of the poet-confectioner Siraudin was made."

THE STARS APPEARED.

He Only Wanted to See One, but He Was Introduced to a Cluster.

He had been celebrating, not wisely, but too well, and getting obstreperous and noisy and looking for a fight he was tackled by a policeman who in plain clothes was on his way home. The drunken one showed fight and was indignant that an apparently private citizen should try to arrest him.

"Show me your star!" he demanded. "Don't believe you're a cop at all. Won't go with you till I see your star," and he aimed a maudlin blow at the policeman.

There was a scuffle and a fight, short lived, but strenuous, and the drunken man was landed in the police station, where he stayed all night. In the morning it was a disheveled and torn wreck that appeared before the magistrate and who listened to the policeman relate the trouble he had in getting him to the station house.

"He wanted to fight me all the way to the station, your honor. He kept pulling back and trying to trip me and yelling: 'Show me your star! I won't go unless you show me your star.'"

"And," asked the magistrate gently, "did you show him your star?"

"Your honor," interrupted the prisoner, "he clouted me on the head, and I saw the star—I saw several of them, enough to go around the entire force."

Lion's Head Fountains.

Perhaps you have noticed that the water in a great many public fountains, whether for man or beast, comes out of a lion's mouth. Did you ever stop to think why a lion's head should be selected in preference to any other design? Among the ancient Egyptians the rising of the waters of the river Nile was the most important event of the year as it meant life and prosperity to the whole nation. This rising of the waters always took place when the sun was in the constellation of Leo, or the lion, so they adopted the shape of a lion as the symbol for the life giving waters of the Nile and all their fountains were carved with a lion's head. The Greeks and Romans copied this symbol and so it has come down to us.—New York Sun.

The Superior Sex.

It was in a local lunch emporium.

"Look at that girl eating ice cream and fancy pickles," growled the man.

"Queer mixture."

"That's the way women order. Waiter, bring me some caviar and charlotte russe."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Heaven on Earth.

Wife—How nice it would be if all things in this world would work in harmoney!

Hub—Wouldn't it, though? For instance, if coal would go up and down with the thermometer!—Boston Transcript.

His Bright Future.

"He seems to have the happy faculty of never attracting any attention to himself." "So he has. I shouldn't be at all surprised if he got to be vice president of this country some day."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

LOANS ON WORD OF HONOR.

Unique French Society Aids Many and Suffers Little Loss.

The Loan of Honor society is one of the most peculiar organizations in France, according to United States Consul Carl Bailey Hurst, at Lyon. It is an association of philanthropists established a few years ago for the purpose of lending money to clerks, operatives and others in pecuniary distress.

"The sole obligation on the part of the borrowers," said Mr. Hurst, "is to promise on their word of honor to return within a certain time the amount loaned. The success of the undertaking from a charitable point of view has been striking. During the last fiscal year money was lent to 384 persons, among whom there were 51 clerks, 17 small trades people, 12 railroad employees, 9 teachers and mill hands, mechanics, pharmacists, typesetters, students, tailors and carpenters. Of these aided sixty-eight were women, nearly all occupying humble positions.

"The chief causes that brought about the requests for loans were: Sickness, 119 cases; lack of work, 83 cases; debts, 84 cases; starting housekeeping, 27 cases, and in smaller number redeeming pawn tickets, etc. All those granted loans were married people, with the exception of twenty-seven, although sixty-four couples were childless. When a loan is solicited a question blank is usually given to the petitioner asking for information that will enable the society to decide whether money can be judiciously advanced. Investigation is made as to the merits of each seemingly favorable case after the question sheets have been returned.

"Naturally the sums lent are not large, ranging between $6 and $60. Most of the loans have been paid back either fully or in part, and the society has not had to put down more than $200 to profit and loss. The society's receipts are derived from the dues of members, an annual bazaar, small subventions by the city and departmental governments and from occasional private donations.

"Its proved practical usefulness in an untried field tends to strengthen the presumption that the work of the society, especially among those holding minor posts in commerce and trade, will be of lasting benefit in teaching young clerks and others the value of unwritten obligations in business dealings."

Various Cats.

A schoolboy, asked to write an essay on cats, made the following amusing and original statements:

"Cats that's made for little boys and girls to maul and tease is called Maltese cats. Some cats are known by their queer purrs; these are called Purrsian cats. Cats with very bad tempers is called Angorie cats. Sometimes a very fine cat is called a Magnificat. Cats with very deep feelings is called Feline cats."

A New Start.

"I told him there were dozens of people right here in town who had never heard of him."

"I guess that took him down a peg or two."

"I guess it didn't. He started right out to find them and borrow money from them."—Houston Post.

WHY A WATCH WEARS OUT

Neglect is responsible for most Watches going wrong. A Watch should be thoroughly overhauled, at least once a year. Dust collecting in a Watch causes it to run dry, the grit will then wear away the delicate bearings. If you own a good watch, better be on the safe side — Bring it to our Repair Department where it will receive Skilled Attention.

BOYS HAD THEIR FILL OF SAP

About fifteen boys from the Y.M.C.A. had a pleasant excursion on Saturday to Sanderson's sugar bush. Owing to the generosity of Mr. Goodfellow, who is in charge of the maple woods which is about seven miles west of Peterborough, they were allowed to roam freely among the sap-giving trees and make away with as much of the tasty fluid as they could. The boys left about eleven o'clock Saturday morning and returned about 6.30 in the evening. They were in charge of Mr. S. Hall, of the Y.M.C.A., and enjoyed the company of Mr. G. A. Ferguson, of the P.C.I. staff.

REV. DR. SHOREY ON THE DISASTER OF THE TITANIC

Lindsay Warder.

At the memorial service held in the Cambridge street Methodist church Sunday evening, when feeling reference was made to the loss of the Titanic and the great loss of human lives, three laymen gave short and able addresses, namely—Messrs. Wm. Flavelle, Jas. Boxall and Newton Smale, at the conclusion of which the pastor, Rev. Dr. S. J. Shorey, gave the following splendid contribution, the popular minister being the author;

Lest we forget that Thou are yet
From sea to sea, from shore to shore,
Lord over all, for evermore.

The pomp of men, the pride of life,
Lust of the eyes, the fevered strife,
The poor, the rich, the small, the great,
The gain, the loss, the love, the hate,
All, all is done; the hand of death
Has stopped the heart; has choked the breath,
All, all is quenched. The mighty deep
Has hushed it all in endless sleep.

The rich, the poor, the great, the small
Together meet, death levels all;
No poor, no rich, no small, no great,
Nor low, nor high, in this estate!
No scorn of class; ancestral pride,
Nor chance of birth can here divide,
One common fate; in death's embrace,
One common hope; God's truth and grace.

Teach us this fleeting world to use
This world to use, and not abuse,
Teach us the use of things as seen,
Teach us the worth of things unseen,
What are the things by which to live,
And what the thing for which to live?
Who is the giver of them all,
And by whose might we stand or fall.

Oh Lord of hosts
Be with us yet, lest we forget
That Thou are yet
From sea to sea, from shore to shore,
Lord over all for evermore.

TITANIC FUND TO START HERE

Mr. J. John and Wilfrid Shiner, representing the Sons of England, waited upon the City Council last evening, asking the city to follow suit with other places in the creation of a fund for the assistance of bereaved relatives of the crew of the "Titanic." Mr. John stated that a relief fund, organized under the auspices of the city, would contribute much to the amelioration of the trying conditions in which the hundreds dependant ones now found themselves.

Mr. Wilfrid Shiner expressed himself similarily. Their idea was to obtain the prestige of the Mayor's name with the Council in starting the fund, which with their sanction and support would be greatly assisted. He suggested that it be worked out in Peterborough as in other cities that have taken the matter up, and the money that is collected be handled by the city treasurer, or some recognized city official.

Ald. Gordon in supporting the request said that of all worthy motives, the request was one that should be given generous support.

Mayor Bradburn declared himself willing to render any assistance possible but felt that if a fund was collected here, it should not be handled locally, but should be forwarded to some Government official, or one party, who would be responsible for its proper disbursement.

Ald. Gordon finally moved that a comittee of Ald. Morgan, Graham, Johnston and Brown be a committee to report on what amount the city should vote, and suggest a proper scheme for the administration of such a fund. Ald. Buller seconded the motion, which was carried.

The St. George's Choral Society will also present their concert again in aid of a subscription, if required.

PEOPLE WILL BE ASKED TO SANCTION THE BORROWING OF $30,000 FOR FAIR GROUNDS

In the absence of Ald. Gillespie, the following report of the Manufacturers committee was read last evening at the City Council meeting by Ald. Gordon.

Your Manufacturers' Committee beg leave to report as follows—

Gentlemen—We were waited upon by representatives of the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition, to ask that the Council purchase Mr. R. A. Morrow's property for the exhibition grounds and that the exhibition would pay the sinking fund required to pay the debentures when issued as a rental, and that the property should be held under the present lease at a rental of $500 per annum until it expires in five years, then the payment of the sinking fund to commence.

We recommend that the Council submit a by-law to the ratepayers to provide for the purchase of the property for $30,000 and to the issue of debentures for that sum to pay for it.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ALD. GORDON,
Acting Chairman.

Before Ald. Gordon moved the adoption of the report, Mr. R. Neill acting as spokesman for a representative deputation of Fair Directors present, explained a little more explicitly, the wishes of the the agricultural society, for it may be stated here, that the Manufacturers' committee and the Fair Directors have had their heads together for some weeks, considering what action could be taken towards retaining the present grounds for exhibition purposes. Until they had the question in some shape, they preferred the press to remain silent.

The circumstances now therefore are, that the exhibition society feel that matters have reached the point where definite steps should be taken by the city to purchase the present grounds for them for the sum of $30,000 from the owner, R. A. Morrow. As a result of the conference between the two interested committees, the above recommendation was evolved, and came in for considerable discussion at the Council meeting. Mr. Neill's words received due attention as he explained the situation He said that the grounds, if purchased could be used also for park purposes. The Directors desired to see it built up, and all they asked the Council to do was to give them the assurance that at the end of the expiration of the present lease, the city would take over the land for them, so that the Directors could proceed with required improvements immediately. He also remarked that if in five years from now, the property is not used, there will be a handsome profit for someone, and why should n't the city have it.

Mr. J. H. Garbutt, president of the Fair Directors, seconded Mr. Neill's words.

"When the present lease expires," said Mr. Garbutt, "the grounds go back to the owner. The Directors did not feel disposed to erect new buildings on the conditions that the grounds be retained as they are at present."

Ald. Anderson, at this juncture, expressed his view of the proposition He sympathized heartily with the directors, in their ambition to acquire the present fair grounds, but considered there were other things of more urgency to be looked after by the city For example, there were the two new bridges, the demand of the Board of Education for $85,000, the cost of the park in the south end, $5000, not to mention the proposal of the city to proceed with street paving. While not speaking along sectional lines, yet there was a park in East City that should not be over-looked, and one in the West ward. In conclusion, he thought that perhaps the Fair directors could struggle along for a few years longer without inconvenience, by a temporary arrangement.

Mr. Neill here reiterated in reply to Ald. Anderson that all the Fair directors desired, was the assurance from the council that they would take over the grounds at the end of the present five years lease.

Mayor Bradburn—"If we put the by-law to the people, don't you think your association should pay the cost of submitting it. Why not wait until we are in a position to submit other by-laws."

The cost of submitting the by-law alone would be around $250.

Ald. Johnston, thought the difficulty was, owing to so many other things being brought up. He suggested putting the by-law to the people at the municipal elections in January. Ald. Morgan suggested putting the by-law before the people accompanied by other needed ones and allowing the people to settle it.

An arrangement was finally agreed upon by Ald. Gordon, who moved for the adoption of the manufacturers' report. The Fair Directors evidenced their willingness to provide for the interest, the city to provide the sinking fund.

Ald. Gordon expressed doubt as to the by-law ever carrying. A loss might be entailed by the city keeping the grounds for ten or twenty years, before they would get any returns for their investment.

Ald. Buller and Brown moved that a by-law be prepared to submit to the ratepayers to provide for the building of a bridge across the river at Dalhousie or Sherbrooke streets. Carried.

GARBAGE DUMP WILL BE IN NORTH MONAGHAN FOR REMAINDER OF YEAR AT LEAST

A temporary arrangement for the disposal of garbage was reached last evening by the City Council passing a by-law, authorizing the execution of a by-law, accepting the offer of F. W. A. Smith to dispose and care of garbage from the city on his property in North Monaghan, for the sum of $300 for the balance of the year.

Ald. Duncan, on behalf of his committee, reported having personally visited Mr. Smith's property and was in favor of accepting his offer, for the remainder of the year, and in the meantime, he would inspect the property of Mr. Sucee and Mr. McGregor, two other gentlemen, who were present to negotiate the offering of property to the city, either by selling or rental. Mr. McGregor, had a ten acre lot, that he would rent or sell, situated between Sucee's lot and the Williams property. His rental price for the year was $425, or selling price $2200. There were no buildings upon it.

Ald. Gordon recommended that the same committee as before, be a committee to investigate prices for the purchasing of a permanent dumping ground for the city.

PETERBORO COUNTY FARMERS AND ALFALFA COMPETITION

Farm and Dairy, our local farm journal published here in Peterboro is planning to carry on this year the Alfalfa competition that was started last year. All farmers in Peterboro County who have a field of three or more acres of alfalfa that was seeded last spring are invited to enter their fields in this alfalfa competition. Valuable prizes probably in the form of cups, will be given for several of the best fields.

There is no entry fee for this competition. The only requirement is that the competitor must be a subscriber to "Farm and Dairy." Send your entries to the editor, "Farm and Dairy," at Peterboro.

HINTS ON THE CARE OF POULTRY

In a well prepared bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Mr. O. H. Higgins, B.S., D.V.S., poultry manager at tthe Central Experimental Station, gives some valuable information on the subject of tuberculosis in poultry.

The disease, according to Mr. Higgins, was first identified in Western Ontario, in 1901, by Prof. P. C. Harrison, by Prof. A. C. Elford in 1903, and by Mr. Higgins himself the following year. The disease has also been frequently reported from Guelph Agricultural College.

While it is impossible to state with any degree of accuracy the extent of the loss to poultrymen due to the disease, it is apparent that once the disease makes its appearance in a flock the aggregate losses are large, although a great number of fowl do not usually die at one time.

The following is an extract from an enquiry made by a poultryman who sent an affected bird to Ottawa for examination:

"We have lost as many as a hundred fowls from this disease during the past two years. They go light and gradually grow weaker, having yellow or greenish diarrhoea, some eat to the last, others do not. We have fed mixed grains also mash but they have been eating a large quantity of wheat screenings. We find many of our chicks go the same as the older hens, dying at all ages. We are beginning to think that artificial hatching has something to do with it, and we are afraid it is tuberculosis caused by the overheated air of the incubator during the hatching season. We try to keep the conditions favorable around the houses and yards."

Commencing on the above, Mr. Higgins points out that as tuberculosis is due to an infecting germ overheating of the incubator could not be responsible for the condition unless the germ were present. "The surrounding conditions may render the birds susceptible, but cannot produce the disease."

The detection of the disease is admitted to be difficult, as symptoms are not always the same. Some may be found to be "going light" though they are good feeders. On examination it will be found that the flesh has almost entirely disappeared from the breast bone. A yellow or greenish diarrhoea is frequently present. In such cases the danger is very great, as germs will be found in immense numbers in the droppings. It is easily understood that such being the case, the other birds, when feeding from the litter, are almost sure to become affected. Another and frequent symptom is lameness, caused by either or both hips being the seat of tubercular ulceration. Fowls affected with tuberculosis may die in a few days from the first appearance of symptoms or may linger for weeks or months, finally succumbing from exhaustion.

Post-mortem findings are not to go into detail, spotted liver, the liver being in many cases greatly enlarged These spots or lesions may vary from the size of a pin point to that of a large pea. They are white or yellow in color. Their organs may be affected in a like manner. When the intestines are involved nodules as large as a medium sized nut may be found.

When once the disease is discovered in the flock it is recommended that the entire flock be destroyed if all have been running together. Those of the birds slaughtered that are found on examination to be free from the disease are suitable for food. When lesions are present, however, the flesh is not fit to eat.

Before other fowl are allowed to enter such a hennery, the quarters should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected, by spraying with a 5 per cent. solution of crude carbolic acid. This may be made by adding two teacupsful of crude carbolic acid to a pail of hot lime-wash. Apply to all parts of the house with spray pump brush or old broom. Care must be taken not to get any of the solution in the eyes of the operator. All droppings must be removed beyond the reach of any other fowl.

"In the prevention of tuberculosis and other infectious diseases of fowl sanitary surroundings, with plenty of sunlight and fresh air are requisites of prime improtance. In our opinion these features are best obtained by the use of the modern cotton front house, a number of types having been described by various poultry authorities. Circular, No. 7, prepared by Prof. A. G. Gilbert, of the experimental farm staff, describes in detail the method of construction, and may be obtained on application."

Some people keep chickens while others have learned the trick of making their chickens help keep them. If you belong to the first-mentioned class then there is something wrong either in your methods or in the flock themselves. Wherever the fault lies an effort should be made to discover the cause and apply a remedy.

If the fault is yours it should be easily remedied once discovered. Should it be directly traceable to the hens then the best thing to do is to clean out at whatever price you can get, and make a fresh start with entirely new stock. This does not necessarily mean that a new breed should be taken up. On the contrary iti s much better to stick to the same breed—the one you are most familiar with.

"The Seashore" a forty-eight page booklet with a striking cover and over 100 illustrations, has just appeared describing the New London Districts of Connecticut on the line of the Central Vermont Railway, which promises to be an even more popular summer resort for Canadians in general and Montrealers in particular, than even Old Orchard was, in its palmiest days. Anyone who is worried over the annual "summer vacation problem" will find interest if not inspiration in the contents. Just ho wvaried the resources of this new territory are can be realized from the statement that they include deep sea fishing and sailing at New London, river boating on the Thames, salt water bathing and sand for the youngsters at Ocean Beach, Watch Hill and Block Island, as well as golf and tennis at Fisher's Island.

WHEN HOME RULE COMES

What Flag Will Ireland Fly in New Regime

Dublin, April 23.—Now that there is a fighting chance of Ireland becoming "a nation once again," many ardent patriots are discussing the pattern of flag which will fly over the Parliament buildings in College Green, the historic Castle, and all the other seats of the yet to be constituted Irish Government. This may seem a rather trifling detail, but in every country, even including the new republic of China, the flag is the emblem of the nation, and in most it has a definite historic significance, the colors or heraldic devices which it bears having a distinct meaning.

Probably nine Irishmen out of ten, if asked what the national flag of Ireland is, would reply without hesitation "the harp without the crown," meaning the golden Celtic harp on a green ground which is flown so universally by Irish patriots to-day. Most of them believe that this has always been Ireland's flag, but the fact is that as flags go it is a mere upstart. It first made its appearance in 1798, when it was adopted by the United Irishmen, and it is said they chose green because it is a blend of orange and blue, to typify the union of the north and south.

OWEN ROE'S FLAG.

There is a story—unauthenticated, however—that Owen Roe O'Neill used this flag in the seventeenth century, but against that we have the testimony of Cromwells' soldiers, who described the Irish flag at that time as a red cross on a golden crown. The harp is purely of English origin. having been used by English kings from the time of Henry VIII. to typify Ireland.

In point of antiquity the most respectable Irish flag is the "spear and serpent," which appears in the arms of the O'Sullivans. It is said to commemorate the incidents of Gaodhal Glas, the ancestor of Milesius, who, tradition says, was cured of a snake bite by the rod of Moses. Next to that comes the flag of Fionn MacCumhall's militia, the golden sunburst on a blue ground, and the weight of opinion seems to favor this is the true national flag. Blue, indeed, was always Ireland's color until 1798, and the "sunburst" with its significance of the re-birth of nationhood and prosperity surely is appropriate.

HISTORIC ENSIGNS.

There are a number of other flags, however, which have figured in Irish history, and all have their enthusiastic supporters. One of the most popular is the three golden crowns on a blue ground, which figures now in the arms of the province of Munster. This was accepted after the Norman invasion in 1170 as the flag of Ireland, the three crowns typifying the three kingdoms of Desmond, Ormond and Thomond. It was retained until 1547, when Henry VIII fearing that the three crowns might be confounded with the triple tiara of the Pope, abolished it and substituted the harp.

The harp, however did not have all its own way, for Henry's daughter Elizabeth was troubled exceedingly by the O'Neills, Earls of Ulster, who came as near being Kings of Ireland as any one since Brian Boru. Their advice was the "Lamh Dearg Eirinn" the "red hand of Ireland," on a white ground, and was borne by the victorious armies that Shane and Hugh O'Neill led against Elizabeth's generals. The red hand still figures in the arms of the province of Ulster and of course in those of the modern representatives of the O'Neill family.

GRATTAN'S PARLIAMENT

Coming down to more recent times we find that Grattan's patriot parliament did not recognize green, although it did accept the harp. Its flag was a golden harp on a blue ground.

A new flag was evolved at the time of the Union, apparently for the express purpose of incorporating it in what is now known as the Union Jack. This was the red saltire on a white ground, which was christened "St. Patrick's Cross," although what St. Patrick had to do with it no one knows. Apparently it was "lifted" from the arms of Trinity College, Dublin, though how Trinity came by it is equally a mystery. It has been suggested that Trinity helped itself to the cross from the arms of the Fitzgeralds, which it resembles slightly.

The weight of informed public opinion in Ireland is in favor of the blue ground, but is about equally divided between the harp and the sunburst. It is argued for the harp that modern Irishmen are more familiar with it than with the sunburst, while the advocates of the sunburst urge in its favor its antiquity and its purely Irish origin as well as its symbolic significance.

The Sinn Fein party also makes an interesting suggestion about the material of the flag. Most modern flags are made either of silk or cotton, neither of which is produced in Ireland. Good, strong Irish linen is suggested by the Sinn Feiners as the most appropriate material.

There has also been some discussion as to the Royal Standard which is flown by the King personally, as distinguished from the national flag. It is suggested that when King George visits Ireland to open his first Parliament he should be presented with a Standard which typifies his position as King of Ireland—not of the United Kingdom—and that this should consist of a blue ground with the arms of the four provinces borne quarterly—the red hand for Ulster; three crowns for Munster; the ancient Irish ship for Connacht and the three burning castles fo the O'Beirn, the O'Mordha and the O'Tuathail for Leinster, with the harp or the sunburst, whichever may be adopted finally, in the centre.

Talk No. 7. MYOPIA OF THE EYE

Myopia means near sight. When an eye is myopic or near sighted the image looked at does not focus on the nerve, the eyeball therefore is too long. Now, as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we put in front of it a concave lens. This kind of a glass has the property of putting the focus back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold reading close to the eyes, objects at a distance being dim. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit the Optical Institute and learn more about correcting imperfect sight by lenses ground to special prescription.

ALMOST LOST HIS LIFE IN THE ICY WATERS

Special Correspondence.

Oshkigmong, April 23—A very narrow escape from being drowned happened to Mr. William Taylor of this place, while dragging his canoe across a block of ice one day last week. The frail ice yielded from under his feet which precipitated him into the water upsetting his canoe at the same time. Had not Mr. Sam Fawn made his timely appearance and rescued him from his perilous position, Mr. Taylor would have certainly been drowned. He was in a very exhaustive condition when Mr. Fawn arrived with his canoe.

The snow has entirely disappeared from the ground and the roads are fast drying up.

Mr. A. McCue, President of the Epworth League here, gave the boys some good advice and spoke to them with kind and loving remarks, prior to their departure to the drives. The boys manifested much appreciation and much attention was paid as Mr. McCue spoke to them.

We are glad to know that those who were seriously sick are recovering nicely.

Muskrats are very scarce in these parts owing to much ice on the lakes.

ALL PARTIES IN RAILWAY STRIKE AGREE TO ARBITRATE

Huge Tie-Up Affecting Fifty U. S. Lines In Eastern District Will Be Averted by Conference With Federal Labor Bureau Officials—Railway Managers Reply to Overtures In a Way That Argues Peace.

New York, April 24.—Mediation of the differences between the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the eastern railways, which have threatened a strike on fifty lines east of Chicago and north of the Potomac, is expected to result from the action of the conference committee of railway managers yesterday in agreeing to confer with Charles P. Neill, U. S. labor commissioner, and Judge M. J. Knapp of the U. S. Commerce Court, regarding the dispute.

While the answer of the railroads to the letter of Messrs. Neill and Knapp did not definitely accept mediation, the opinion was expressed by the engineers that, in the end, this would be the result. Commissioner Neill, in an interview given after he had received the railroads' answer, also indicated that he considered that mediation was intended. Last night in all quarters the opinion was expressed that the possibility of a strike, which yesterday appeared imminent, is increasingly remote.

On a series of conferences beginning to-day probably will depend either the definite settlement of the dispute or the arrangement of a plan of arbitration. Mr. Neill announced last night that he will confer with the railway managers to-day, and, if possible, will meet the engineers later in the day. Judge Knapp, according to word received from Washington last night, will leave that city to take part in the conference to-day.

Notice of the desire of the railways to confer was received after a conference lasting practically all day. The presidents of several railways involved also were in conference here last night, and it is understood that they approved of the letter sent to the Government representatives.

Immediately upon receipt of this letter, Mr. Neill announced his program for immediate action toward ending the trouble if possible. It is his plan for him to confer with the railway managers, while Judge Knapp will confer with the engineers. They will meet later to compare notes. In this way, he pointed out, the rights of each side will be protected by secrecy from the other, while giving the Government representatives a basis upon which to work for a settlement.

SIX OF ALLEN GANG IN COURT

Hillsville, Va., April 24.—Six members of the Allen clan were arraigned here yesterday to answer for their part in the Carroll Court tragedy of March 14, when judge, prosecutor, sheriff, a juror, and a spectator were shot to death.

Attorneys for the accused have admitted that an effort will be made to place responsibility for the murders upon Sidney Allen and Wesley Edwards, the only two members of the gang still at large. It will be claimed that Floyd Allen shot in self-defence when attacked by court officers, that Claude and Friel Allen fired in the excitement of the moment, and that Sidna Edwards, Boyd Marion, and Victor Allen did not shoot at all.

C.P.R.'s Colonization Scheme.

Montreal, April 24.—One of the first results of the creation of the natural resources department on the C.P.R. is announced in the adoption of a scheme for the colonization of the company's lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The most striking innovation in this scheme is that the Canadian Pacific will loan each settler colonist a sum of $2,000 for a period of ten years, at 6 per cent. per annum, for use in the development of his farm.

Niagara Disappointed.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 24.—General regret was expressed on both sides of the river yesterday because the governor vetoed the bill appropriating $50,000 for permanent lighting of the cataracts. He disapproved of the measure because Ontario failed to pass similar legislation.

POLICEMAN GETS HIS REWARD

Toronto, April 24.—The reward for the apprehension of Dr. Beattie Nesbitt at Chicago will not go to Joseph Sadacco, the former waiter at the Albany Club here, for the reason that that gentleman did not notify the police that he had any information regarding the whereabouts of the doctor until after he was arrested. The man who is entitled to the reward is Herman S. Schattler, assistant superintendent of police for Chicago. It was he who first located the doctor in that city.

While the police here will not confirm the report, it is learned that the doctor was located by tracing through a three-stage delivery the letters of Mrs. Nesbitt to Dr. Nesbitt at Chicago. Some time ago, it is said, the police learned that there was likely to be considerable correspondence from friends of the doctor here and himself regarding proposed negotiations for his return, and a strict watch was set, with the result that trace was had of one or more letters going from Toronto to him by an indirect route, and he was thus located.

Prairie Fire Near Davidson, Sask.

Davidson, Sask., April 24.—Robert Crawford, a farmer living near here, had his ears burned to a crisp and his arms, hands and other parts of his body badly burned in a prairie fire which is believed to have been started from sparks from a railway engine, and which has been raging for some days. Mr. Crawford was hurried to the Saskatchewan Hospital and his recovery is doubtful.

Many farmers are fighting the fire, which for a time threatened to reach Manitou and Long Lake. Some of the fighters had narrow escapes from death, and many farmers have nothing left of their farms but the blackened earth.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

Quebec, April 24.—Cleroux and Garneau, the two youths who have been on trial in connection with the death of George Leclerc, were found guilty of manslaughter yesterday afternoon and sentenced to ten and five years respectively in the penitentiary.

BIG MAJORITY FOR THE UNION

Toronto, April 24.—Despite the vote of the Presbyterian Church, the Canadian Methodists continue to pile up a large majority for organic union between the three churches, Presbyterian, Methodists, and Congregational.

The latest figures compiled yesterday show that the total votes cast to date give almost ninety per cent. of the membership and adherents in favor of the tri-une church. The quarterly official boards have voted about ninety-five per cent. in favor, which shows that about one-quarter of the boards were unanimous, a half in favor, and only about one quarter against the proposal.

Reports from the mission fields show an exceptionally strong vote for the amalgamation.

A Congregation Divided.

Belleville, April 24.—At an adjourned vestry meeting at St. John's Church the wardens protested against the action of Bishop Mills, in which he expressed his determination to close the church. By a narrow majority a resolution protesting to the synods against the bishop's action was defeated. The church and site will be disposed of.

By a vote of 501 to 50 the congregation of Bridge street Methodist Church in this city has decided in favor of church union.

New German Lloyd Boat.

Berlin, April 24.—The new transatlantic steamer which was ordered by the North German Lloyd on April 11 at the Schichau shipbuilding yard at Bremen is to have a displacement of 35,000 tons. The company declares that reports, according to which the vessel was to displace 54,500 tons and that the construction of further similar ships was in contempation, are incorrect.

Will Judge Designs.

Ottawa, April 24.—The Government announces that the judges of the competitive designs for the monument to be erected at Ottawa to his late Majesty, King Edward, will be the advisory art council composed of Sir Edmund Walker, Toronto; Dr. Francis J. Shepherd, Montreal, and Senator Arthur Boyer, Montreal.

BIG LINER HAD MISHAP

Special To The Review.

New York, April 24—The giant Cunarder, "Mauretania" was slightly damaged this morning, when a strong ebb tide swung her against a pier as she was leaving for Liverpool. The bridge rail of the boat was twisted and the pier was damaged.

A Trial for Murder.

Port Huron, Mich., April 24.—Geo. Esson of Petrolea, Ontario, charged with killing Thomas Major, whose body was found under the steps of the first Baptist Church here on February 28th, is now on trial in the Circuit Court before Judge Law. It was expected that a jury would be obtained to-day.

The case has excited unusual attention throughout the state owing to the prominence of Mr. Major and the mysterious circumstances surrounding his death.

Robbery is said to have been the motive for the act. The police declare that two men were responsible for the crime, but Esson is the only one under arrest at present.

Exposure Caused Death.

Bridgeport, Conn., April 24.—G. W. Wilson, the 19-year-old cabin boy to Captain Smith of the Titanic, died at his home near this city Monday night as the result of shock and exposure suffered in the wreck.

He had been subpoenaed to appear before the Senate investigating committee at Washington.

Wilson came to his home at Oronoque Saturday and had been critically ill since. His brother, John J. Wilson, was lost when the Titanic went down.

VETERAN OF INDIAN WAR NOW POLICE JUDGE

CAPTAIN SUM-KIN FOR THREE YEARS A POLICE JUDGE.
MOORHOUSE PHOTO

Among the old Indian characters alive on the Umatilla Reservation to-day there is one who is as familiar to the white inhabitants of the country as to his tribesmen—Captain Sum-Kin, for three years Indian Police Judge.

He acquired the title of "Captain" while he was captain of Indian police, in which capacity he established an enviable reputation, having shown on many occasions that not only was he faithful and fair in the performance of his duties but absolutely fearless. Many of his friends maintain that Sum-Kin does not possess that particular element, found in nearly all mankind, which inspires fear.

BINOCULARS WOULD HAVE ALLOWED LOOKOUT ON TITANIC TO SIGHT ICEBERG

Major Peuchen of Toronto Gives His Evidence Before Senatorial Board —He Does Not Blame the Captain, But Has Sharp Criticism For the Company — Sailors Not In Their Places at the Lifeboats.

Washington, April 24.—Like the missing horseshoe nail that cost a monarch his kingdom, the failure to provide binoculars or spyglasses for the lookouts on the Titanic was one contributing cause of that ship's loss and, with it, the loss of more than 1,600 lives.

Two witnesses before the Senate investigation committee yesterday agreed on this. They were Frederick Fleet, a look out on the liner, and Major Arthur Godfrey Peuchen, Canadian manufacturer and yachtsman, who was among the rescued passengers. Fleet acknowledged that if he had been helped in his observations by a glass, he could probably have spied the berg into which the ship crashed in time to have warned the bridge to avoid it. Major Peuchen also testified to the much greater sweep of vision afforded by binoculars; and, as a yatchsman, said he believed the presence of the iceberg might have been detected in time to escape the collision had the lookout man been so equipped.

It was made to appear that the blame for being without glasses did not rest with the lookout men. Fleet said they had asked for them at Southampton and were told that there were none for them. One glass, in a pinch, would have served in the crow's nest.

Major Peuchen criticized in strong terms the lack of experienced sailors on board the Titanic. He said that when the call to quarters was sounded not enough of the crew responded to undertake the work required in lowering and filling the boats. Furthermore, he said, no drills had been held from the time the ship left Southampton, although it was customary to hold such drills every Sunday.

At the morning session, Third Officer Pittman of the Titanic admitted that the only drill was that before leaving Southampton. The boat of which he took command under First Officer Murdock's orders, did not seek to pick up survivors after the wreck because passengers in the lifeboat demurred.

Major Peuchen was the first passenger witness to appear before the committee. All ten of his friends with whom he was traveling lost their lives in the wreck.

Senator Smith urged him to strive to remember the names of as many passengers as he could.

"I cannot remember many, but I saw a list being copied in the smoking room of the Carpathia. I did not get a copy," replied Major Peuchen.

Senator Smith then asked Major Peuchen to tell the story of the voyage, telling of the weather, accidents and whether there was any fire aboard. The major told of the trip and said:

"There was no mention of fire and we were all pleased with the trip until the crash. After 11 o'clock I went to my stateroom. I scarcely was undressed when I felt a shock. I thought merely that a large wave had struck the ship.

"I put on my coat and went on deck," said he. "I met a friend, who said, 'We've struck an iceberg.' We went up on deck and saw the iceberg from the fore part of the ship. Some ice had fallen four or five feet inside the rail.

"After a few minutes I went to other friends and said it was not serious. Fifteen minutes later I met Charles M. Hays of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I asked him, 'Have you seen the ice?' He said 'No.' Then I took him up and showed him. Then I noticed the boat was listing.

Major Peuchen was asked with regard to the filling of the boats, if men were allowed in.

"They would only allow women. Men had to stand back. The second officer stood there and that was the order enforced. No men, passengers got in that boat."

"Did you see any man attempt to get in?" asked Senator Smith.

"No. The boat was safely lowered. There were about 36 or 37 persons in it. Then we turned to the next boat. I was surprised that the sailors were not at their posts, as they should have been. I have seen fire drills and the action of the sailors did not impress me."

Major Peuchen said that in the lifeboat the quartermaster in charge made a woman row while he held the tiller, steering for a light, which, the major declared, did not exist, so far as he could see. The quartermaster refused to turn about and attempt to pick survivors, said the witness.

Major Peuchen said he had got into the lifeboat by sliding down a rope from the deck. Captain Smith, he said, had told him to break out a window and get into the boat that way, but the major did not think that feasible.

Major Peuchen said the lifeboat he was in was equipped with everything required. Some of the boats he heard were not sufficiently equipped with food. When he got on the Carpathia, he examined several lifeboats and found they had lights, hardtack and water.

"From what you observed, was there proper discipline on the part of the crew in loading the lifeboats?"

"Those of the crew that I saw working in lowering and filling the boats couldn't have been better, but they were too few. I was surprised not to see more sailors at their stations, and also surprised that more people were not put in the boats."

The men had had no practice, the witness said, the members of the crew had told him.

Major Peuchen read a statement in order to make clear his position, as follows:

"I do not criticize Captain Smith, but I do criticize the policy and methods pursued by the company for I feel sure that in this case caution would have averted a terrible calamity. I have been given credit for saying many things absolutely untrue, and I wish to state that I have not said any personal or unkind thing about Captain Smith."

The major was then excused.

Frederick Fleet, the lookout, then was re-called to the stand, but before his examination was begun the committee decided to adjourn the hearing until 10 o'clock this morning.

TO PROBE MASSACRE

French at Fez Will Hold an Immediate Investigation.

Paris, April 24.—The massacre at Fez, in which a large number of French officers, soldiers and citizens were killed and wounded, has given rise to considerable criticism of the Government authorities for not foreseeing and preventing the occurrence. It is pointed out by the newspapers that the French troops occupied the Moroccan capital more than a year ago.

Premier Poincaire telegraphed yesterday to Eugene Regnault, the French Minister, to make a rapid and complete investigation.

The special correspondents of the French newspapers at Fez indicate that the plot of the rebels included the massacre of the whole of the French mission, headed by M. Regnault, which recently arrived at the capital to establish the protectorate. This plan failed, owing to the impatience of the Arabian women to begin the carnage.

These women are described by the correspondents as creatures of terrifying appearance, who passed their time in rushing about the streets and torturing the wounded, and sometimes aiding the Moorish rebels in the final mutilation and desecration of the victims.

Scenes of awful horror occurred in the Jewish quarter of the city where the mob murdered, pillaged and burned all the Jews they could find, throwing their bodies from the roofs. Many young girls were carried off and suffered indescribable outrages. The Jewish quarter was set on fire and three-fourths of it entirely destroyed, rendering over a thousand people homeless.

STRIKE OF OLYMPIC STOKERS

Claim Collapsible Life Boats Are not Seaworthy

Special To The Review.

Southampton, Eng., April 24.—Three hundred stokers on the steamer Olympic struck five minutes before sailing time, claiming that the collapsible carvass life boats were unseaworthy. The vessel was towed out a short distance and is held, waiting the recruiting of a new force of firemen.

ANOTHER LIFE TAKEN

Auto Robber and Murderer Makes His Escape

Special To The Review.

Paris, April 24—Bonnot, the leader of the band who made a specialty of murdering and plundering automobilits, added at least one victim to his list early to-day. A strong cordon of police surrounded the house in which he was hiding, but Bonnot fought his way through, killing assistant chief of detectives, Jouin, and mortally wounding another officer.

REDMOND FAVORS NOMINATED SENATE

London, April 24.—Redmond, speaking at the National Convention at Dublin yesterday said that his own experience with colonies led him to favor a nominated senate. He wanted a second chamber crowded with men who had hitherto no sympathy with the Nationalist party, men with a great stake in the country, representative of literature and art. The chances of the bill were far better than with either of the two previous bills. Mr. Redmond asked the convention to endorse his acceptance of the bill, and the whole assembly rose to its feet, cheered, and waved hats and handkerchiefs for three or four minutes.

"I ask you to say I speak, not for the Irish party, but for the Irish people," said Redmond, and at this an even greater demonstration than before was witnessed, which was renewed when Redmond sat down.

Hope For Indian.

Sarnia, April 24.—The police here are investigating a new theory in the Walpole Island murder, for which Stephen Kyoshk, a twenty-year-old Indian youth, has been sentenced to hang. The latest developments may remove the stain of guilt from the young man and place it on another Indian.

Kyoshk has stated to his minister, Rev. Mr. Rigsby of the Sarnia Reserve, some very important facts. The blame is put on a neighbor, and the authorities are investigating.

The prosecution in the case claimed that a repeating shotgun was used, but from the facts brought out yesterday it has been proven that the shells produced had not been used in a repeating gun.

Disestablishment Bill for Wales.

London, April 24.—Reginald McKenna, Home Secretary, yesterday introduced in the House of Commons the Welsh disestablishment bill, which provides that after July 1, following the passing of the act, the four Welsh dioceses will cease to form part of the province of Canterbury.

Charles W. Warren, Night Watchman, Tries to Get Out of Burning Can Manufacturing Plant, But Is Overcome by Smoke Before Fireman Can Get to Him—Fort William Is Visited by Blaze Costing $132,000.

Hamilton, April 24.—Shortly before six o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the factory of the American Can Co., Shaw and Emerald streets, that caused the death of the night watchman, Charles W. Warren, 186 Gibson avenue; about $15,000 damage, and will result in about 100 men being thrown out of work for a time. The property loss is covered by insurance. Mr. Warren made his rounds of the premises about twenty minutes before the fire was discovered, and everything appeared to be all right. It was his duty to light the gas under a pot containing asphaltum that is used for soldering cans. It is believed that he had done this and in some manner the asphaltum caught fire and that he tried to check the flames. He failed in this and tried to get out of the burning building, but was probably overcome by the heavy smoke which quickly filled that part. The head watchman, Daniel Orders, made an effort to get him out, but was unable to continue at his task because of the overpowering smoke. The fire had gain considerable headway when the firemen arrived, and they succeeded in getting the unfortunate watchman's body out of the building, but he was then past help. Owing to the slow burning construction of the building the firemen were enabled to check the flames before they spread to other parts of the plant, and the principal damage was by water from the sprinkler system. This was largely instrumental in checking the spread of the fire, but the water ruined a large amount of stock which was made or in progress of manufacture. It was stated by the management that the manufacturing part of the establishment would not be crippled by the fire, and that it would be in a position in a day or two to carry out all its orders. The part that was damaged was the paper can department.

Fort William's Loss.

Fort William, April 24.—Fire broke out in Colville's hardware store on Simpson street yesterday morning, and, owing to the fact that the city mains were turned off for repairs, three stores were consumed—W. G. Colville's hardware, Gregory's poolroom and Henderson's outfitting establishment. The first named form part of the Nault block, a double-storied structure, while Henderson's store was three stories high. Total loss estimated at $132,000, one-fourth being for the buildings and the other for stock, $25,000 of the latter being made up of the Plymouth Clothing Co.'s goods, damaged by water. About two-thirds of the loss is covered by insurance.

$15,000 Fire In Montreal.

Montreal, April 24.—Fire caused $15,000 damage early yesterday morning to the premises occupied by Smeaton Bros., 10 Cote street.

Two Stunned by Lightning.

Kingston, April 24—Lightning struck the home of Mrs. Agnes Nicholson. Her two sons were stunned, but recovered in five minutes. The roof of the house caught fire and a large hole was burned in it before it was extinguished.

Dalton & Sons' hardware store was badly damaged by fire, which broke out late yesterday afternoon. The fire started in the basement from some unknown cause.

Incendiary's Busy Night.

Waterbury, Conn., April 24.—Quiet prevails here to-day after the terror and turbulence of Monday night as the result of the breaking out of 13 mysterious fires in various parts of the city, one of them in the City Hall.

This latter was the only serious blaze, the municipal building being wrecked. The property damage in the other fires was small.

LICENSES MUST BE CANCELLED

Special to the Review.

Toronto, April 24.—Hon. Mr. Hanna has notified the Temiskaming Commissioners that wine and beer licenses reported to have been granted in Cobalt must be cancelled.

INCREASE FOR G. T. R. ENGINEERS

Montreal, April 24.—Locomotive engineers over the entire Grand Trunk railway system have been granted a horizontal increase in salaries amountin gfrom ten to eleven per cent, and effective April 1, in addition to the wage increase numerous complaints have been settled and concessions made relative to working conditions.

The new agreement, which is drawn for three years, was concluded after a conference of several weeks in Montreal between a committee of twenty-five members of the B. of L. E. and Mr. W. D. Robb, general superintendent of motive power for the Grand Trunk System.

General chairman Dan Cameron, of Allandale, Ont., and vice-chairman Dewar stated that practically everything asked for was granted and that the members of the committee are returning to their respective homes to-night well pleased with the outcome of the conference. The former agreement, drawn in 1910, also was for a ten per cent. increase, and Superintendent W. D. Robb is given credit in each instance for willingly encouraging the engineers and assisting them to solve any differences with the company. In this connection, also, the late general manager, Mr. Charles M. Hayes, is reported by the men to have always been personally instrumental in amicably adjusting any differences.

Her Case Is Hopeless.

A little girl became so accustomed to exaggeration and misstatement that nobody could believe her, and her parents were greatly annoyed by the unfortunate reputation that she was acquiring.

One afternoon her mother said to her: "Now, listen, Lillian, and heed my words. What has happened to one sinner may easily happen to another. You know what happened to Ananias and Sapphira, don't you?"

"Yes'm, I do. They fell dead on the street corner, and I saw 'em carried into a drug store."

ST. JOHN UNDER A COMMISSION

St. John, N.B., April 24.—The commission form of civic government will be given its first trial in Eastern Canada by the council which was elected in St. John yesterday. The new body will consist of James H. Frink, mayor, and four commissioners, H. R. McLellan, H. B. Schofield, R. W. Wigmore and M. E. Agar.

This was the final election following the primary held two weeks ago. By the previous election the candidate for mayor on the citizens' ticket, and ten candidates for commissionerships were eliminated and two for mayor and eight for commissionerships were left on the final ballot. The defeated candidate for mayor, T. H. Bullock, who had served two terms. He lost yesterday by only seven votes.

Under the new arrangement, the mayor will be the head of the finance department, and each of the commissioners will head one of the four civic departments, allotment of officers to be arranged among themselves. McClellan and Schofield, who led the polls, will serve four year terms, and the other commissioners two years. In 1914, two more commissioners will be elected for four year terms, and after that two will retire every second year. The mayor is elected for a two year term.

LIVER LAZINESS

Those Who Lack Energy and are Unsuccessful Should Read This Closely.

"I am only thirty years old, yet for almost two years I have felt more like seventy-five. I have found it difficult to sleep at night and in the morning feel so depressed and heavy that effort was difficult. My hands were always clammy and perspiration on slight effort would break out all over me. It was not unnatural that I should begin to brood over the chance that I should soon be unfit to do my work, and this dread made my sleepless nights perfect misery. After repeated trials of medicine and mixtures Dr. Hamilton's Pills gave me the first gleam of hope. From the very first I could see they were different in action from other pills. They didn't gripe and acted as naturally as if nature and not the pills were cleansing my clogged up system. My spirits rose, I felt much better, the sluggish action of the system gave way to normal activity. Dizziness and headaches ceased, appetite, good color, and ambition to work returned and have remained. I am like a new man and I thank Dr. Hamilton's Pills for it all."

This was the experience of J. E. Parkhurst, a well-known grocery dealer in Jefferson. Follow his advice, use Dr. Hamilton's Pills for your stomach, kidneys, and liver, and you'll enjoy long life and robust good health. All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, in yellow boxes, 25c. per box, from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. R. R. Gamey, M.P.P., having found that the expedition to the north to locate the five-mile strip which the Province is to receive from the Dominion, would take him away from his business too long, has declined to take charge of it, and Mr. J. B. Tyrrell, the Geologist and Explorer, will have charge of the expedition instead,

Mr. Gamey would no doubt have been a competent leader of the expedition and have served the Province well, but Mr. Tyrrell will be a capable head for it, and it is perhaps as well that a member of the Legislature will not fill the position. The rule that a member should not hold any position of emolument under the Government has its drawbacks, but it is a wise rule and should not be set aside without serious reason. Indeed it might be safer not to set it aside at all. Now that Mr. Gamey could not see his way to give the time necessary, another competent man has been found. He might have been found at first, and it will probably not be necessary at any time to put a member in any position in which he will receive remuneration from the Government. If it became at all a practice to do so the independence of the Legislature would be seriously endangered.

The position of the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission is entirely different. He is a member of the Government, a Cabinet Minister and the Chairmanship he holds is so much like a portfolio in the Cabinet that it is not analagous to employing a member to do work for the Government. If the work of the Commission had been placed in charge of a new department of the Government with Hon. Mr. Beck at its head, as was proposed, that course would have been in accordance with precedent. It was felt, however, by those interested in the work of the Commission, including the municipalities which are taking power from it, that the time was not opportune for the change to be made, yet they were most desirous of retaining Mr. Beck's services at the head of the Commission and of seeing him remunerated, and the course that was adopted was urged by the municipalities. Mr. Beck has made the work of the Commission a success, with the aid of the other Commissioners, and without the enthusiasm and energy and practical hard work he put into it, it might not have succeeded. The municipalities interested would have been pleased to have seen Mr. Beck remunerated for the work he had done, but he declined that. It is satisfactory to know that provision has been made for the future, and all interested in seeing the water powers of the Province retained or reclaimed for the people will hope that he will long remain in his present position to prosecute that work.

THE TITANIC ENQUIRY

The British Government has announced that an investigation will be held into the wreck of the Titanic. Practically the whole of the evening in the House of Commons of the 22nd was devoted to a discussion of the matter.

A meeting of the leading British ship owners has been summoned for an immediate exchange of views, and steps taken to confer with the Lord Chancellor in regard to the appointment of a high legal authority as wreck commissioner to preside over the Titanic enquiry. All questions as to route, speed, lifeboats, search lights, etc., will be submitted to a searching investigation, by the strongest possible court of enquiry, and if the board of trades' present powers are inadequate to enforce the necessary regulations, it will not hesitate to ask parliament to confer further powers.

LEST WE FORGET

There are characteristics of the British race which come out in great crises, of which everyone who is British is proud, and which are recognized by other peoples. It was not without reason that the captain of the "Titanic" said to the men on her "Be British" for he knew that if that appeal was heeded all the chivalry and fortitude required to face the calamity they had met with would not be lacking. The event proved that he was right. With calm courage the weakest were cared for so far as possible, and the strongest, who might have saved themselves willingly, sacrificed their lives for the women and children. It was noble, it was great, it was British

At the same time there were men of other races on the ill-fated steamer, who showed the same qualities. Among the members of the orchestra, who first tried to cheer the passengers with lively airs, and then to furnish consolation with sacred music, as the steamer sank, were men who have foreign names. The majority of them were British, but the Frenchman and the German proved that they could do their duty. An An English girl in the steerage says that "the foreign men behaved finely. The women were let get the life belts first."

The British can recognize and appreciate greatness and heroism in others, but they possess these qualities themselves.

NOTE AND COMMENT

The Whitney Government has been so capable and efficient that if a small flaw is thought to be discovered a great howl is made about it.

Mr. Roosevelt says that he is now opposed to reciprocity. His change of mind has come before the election, and many Liberals wish that these leaders had had such a change in time.

Cynthia's Chauffeur

By LOUIS TRACY

Copyright by McLeod & Allen, Toronto

strut, her very amplitude of girth and singular rotundity of form, came definitely within the net of his retentive memory.

To be sure, he gave her but brief survey, since her companion, in all likelihood Miss Vanrenen, might quite reasonably attract his attention. Indeed, she would find favor in the eyes of any young man, let alone one who had such cause as Viscount Medenham to be interested in her appearance. In her amazingly lovely face the haughty beauty of an aristocrat was softened by a touch of that piquant femininity which the well-bred American girl seems to bring from Paris with her clothes. A mass of dark brown hair formed a forehead, nose, and mouth of almost Grecian regularity, while her firmly modeled chin, slightly more pronounced in type, would hint at unusual strength of character were not the impression instantly dispelled by the changing lights in a pair of marvelously blue eyes. In the course of a single second Medenham found himself comparing them to blue diamonds, to the azure depths of a sunlit sea, to the exquisite tint of the myosotis. Then he swallowed his surprise, and lifted his cap.

"May I ask if you are Miss Vanrenen?" he said.

The blue eyes met his. For the first time in his life he was thrilled to the core by a woman's glance.

"Yes."

She answered with a smile, an approving smile, perhaps, for the viscount looked very smart in his tight-fitting uniform, but none the less wondering.

"Then I am here instead of Simmonds. His car was put out of commission an hour ago by a brutal railway van, and will not be ready for the road during the next day or two. May I offer my services in the meantime?"

The girl's astonished gaze traveled from Medenham to the spick and span automobile. For the moment he had forgotten his role, and each word he uttered deepened her bewilderment, which grew stronger when she looked at the Mercury. The sleek coach-work and spotless leather upholstery, the shining brass fittings and glistening wings, every visible detail in fact, gave good promise of the excellence of the engine stowed away beneath the square bonnet. Evidently Miss Vanrenen had cultivated the habit of gathering information rapidly.

"This car?" she exclaimed, with a delightful lifting of arched eyebrows.

"Yes, you will not be disappointed in it, I assure you. I am doing Simmonds a friendly turn in taking his place, so I hope the slight accident will not make any difference to your plans."

"But—why has not Simmonds himself come to explain matters?"

"He could not leave his car, which is in a side street off Piccadilly. He would have sent a note, but he remembered that you had never seen his handwriting, so, as a proof of my genuineness, he gave me your itinerary."

Medenham produced a closely-written sheet of note-paper, which Miss Vanrenen presumably recognized. She turned to her stout companion, who had been summing up car and chauffeur with careful eyes since Medenham first spoke.

"What do you think, Mrs. Devar?" she said.

When he heard the name, Medenham was so amazed that the last vestige of chauffeurism vanished from his manner.

"You don't mean to say you are Jimmy Devar's mother?" he gasped.

Mrs. Devar positively jumped. If a look could have slain he would have fallen then and there. As it was, she tried to freeze him to death.

"Do I understand that you are speaking of Captain Devar, of Horton's Horse?" she said, a look as an iceberg.

"Yes," said he coolly, though regretting the lapse. He had stupidly brought about an awkward incident, and must remember in future not to address either lady as an equal.

"I was not aware that my son was on familiar terms with the chauffeur fraternity."

"Sorry, but the name slipped out unawares. Captain Devar is, or used to be, very easy-going in his ways, you know."

"So it would seem." She turned her back on him disdainfully. "In the circumstances, Cynthia," she said, "I am inclined to believe that we ought to make further inquiries before we exchange cars, and drivers, in this fashion."

"But what is to be done? All our arrangements are made—our rooms ordered—I have even sent father each day's address. If we cancel everything by telegraph he will be alarmed."

"Oh, I did not mean that," protested the lady hurriedly. It was evident that she hardly knew what to say. Medenham's wholly unexpected query had unnerved her.

"Is there any alternative?" demanded Cynthia ruefully, glancing from one to the other.

"It is rather late to hire another car to-day, I admit—" began Mrs. Devar.

"It would be quite impossible, madam," put in Medenham. This is Derby Day, and there is not a motor to be obtained in London except a taxicab. It was sheer good luck for Simmonds that he was able to secure me as his deputy."

He thanked his stars for that word "madam." Certainly the mere sound of it seemed to soothe Mrs. Devar's jarred nerves, and the appearance of the Mercury was even more reassuring.

"Ah, well," she said, "we are not traveling into the wilds. If desirable,

FITZROY, THE CHAUFFEUR

we can always return to town by train. By the way, chauffeur, what is your name?"

For an instant Medenham hesitated. Then he took the plunge, strong in the belief that a half-forgotten transaction between himself and "Jimmy" Devar would prevent that impecunious warrior from discussing him freely in the family circle.

"George Augustus Fitzroy," he said.

Mrs. Devar's brows knitted; she was regaining her self-possession, and a sarcastic smile now chased away a perplexing thought. She was about to say something when Cynthia Vanrenen broke in excitedly:

"I declare to goodness if the hotel people have not fastened on our boxes already. They seem to know our minds better than we do ourselves. And here is the man with the wraps ......Please be careful with that camera——Yes, put it there, with the glasses. What are you doing, Fitzroy?" for Medenham was discharging his obligations to the boy in buttons and a porter.

"Paying my debts," said he, smiling at her.

"Of course you realize that I pay all expenses?" she said, with just the requisite note of hauteur in her voice that the situation called for.

"This is entirely a personal matter, I assure you, Miss Vanrenen."

Medenham could not help smiling; he stooped and felt a tire unnecessarily. Cynthia was puzzled. She wrote that evening to Irma Norris, her cousin in Philadelphia—"Fitzroy is a new line in chauffeurs."

"By the way, where is your trunk?" she demanded suddenly.

"I came away unexpectedly, so I have arranged that it shall be sent to Brighton by rail," he explained.

Apparently, there was nothing more to be said. The two ladies seated themselves, and the car sped out into the Strand. They watched the driver's adroit yet scrupulously careful dealing with the traffic, and Cynthia, at least, quickly grasped the essential fact that the six cylinders worked with a silent power that held cheap every other vehicle passed or overtaken on the road.

"It is a lovely automobile," she murmured with a little sigh of satisfaction.

"Quite an up-to-date car, I fancy," agreed her friend.

"I don't understand how this man, Fitzroy, can afford to use it for hiring purposes. Yet, that is his affair—not mine. I rather like him. Don't you?"

"His manners are somewhat offhand, but such persons are given to aping their superiors. George Augustus Fitzroy, too—it is ridiculous. Fitzroy is the family name of the Earls of Fairholme, and their eldest sons have been christened George Augustus ever since the beginning of the eighteenth century."

"The name seems to fit our chauffeur all right, and I guess he has as good a claim to it as any other man."

Cynthia was apt to flaunt the Stars and Stripes when Mrs. Devar aired her class conventions, and the older woman had the tact to agree with a careless nod. Nevertheless, had Cynthia Vanrenen known how strictly accurate was her comment she would have been the most astounded girl in London at that minute. The Viscountcy, of course, was nothing more than a courtesy title; in the cold eye of the law, Medenham's full legal name was that which Mrs. Devar deemed ridiculous. As events shaped themselves, it was of the utmost importance to Cynthia, and to Medenham, and to several other persons who had not yet risen above their common horizon, that Mrs. Devar's sneer should pass unchallenged. Though that lady

Father, Mother, Sister, Brother, All Should Use Parisian Sage

Prevents Baldness--Banishes Dandruff—Stops Falling Hair and Itching Scalp

PARISIAN SAGE is a family hair tonic and dressing that will do much good in every home.

The man who uses PARISIAN SAGE if only occasionally will never grow bald. Baldness is caused by dandruff germs which dig down into the the roots of the hair, devour its nourishment and cause the root to die and the hair to fall and thin out.

MONEY BACK DANDRUFF REMOVER

PARISIAN SAGE is a scientific hair remedy that not only kills the dandruff germs, but gives the hair roots just the same nourishment that nature gives it.

PARISIAN SAGE first kills the germs; then nourishes the weakened hair roots and causes a growth of healthy hair.

This same nourishment (PARISIAN SAGE) causes the hair to grow vigorous, which means that the hair becomes full of life and lustre, and grows radiant and beautiful.

Thousands are wasting time, losing hair and growing bald because they are using superficial tonics. While they may clean the scalp and make it feel refreshed, they do not get to the root of the hair where the real destroyer of hair, the pernicious dandruff germs, thrives and multiplies.

Try PARISIAN SAGE for all hair trouble; it means death to the germs; life to the hair. It is pleasant to use and so harmless that it can be used by every member of the family from the oldest to the little tot.

The Paris police arrested an interesting beggar the other day. They thought he was humpbacked. When he was examined the hump was found to be a parcel containing $4,000 in gold, which was wrapped up in a sack. He had $10,000 in banknotes hidden under his shirt.

Alfonso as an English Lord.

Every one is aware that there are many ties of blood connecting the court of Spain with that of England, but it is not generally known that if, like his neighbor in Portugal, King Alfonso ever finds it necessary to take up his abode in England he will be able to sit in the house of lords. There is an old barony of Lancaster derelict for at least 500 years to which King Alfonso is the direct heir or else a coheir, probably the former.

Fine the Preacher.

"Would you," inquires the Greenwood Journal, "give the deaf man a verdict, if you were on the jury, who is suing for damages because he alleges that he is paying for preaching he can't hear?"

Personally we'd be inclined to render a verdict after the fashion of the immortal Paddy Divver. As the story goes, a loyal henchman of the clan named Danny was arrested for an enthusiastic and successful assault upon an innocent third party. It was just before election, and Danny sent for his leader. The leader heard Danny's story and went to see Paddy Divver.

"Paddy," he said, "I wish you'd be light on Danny. He's a good fellow and can help us a lot in the election."

"All right," said Paddy: "I'll give him thirty days!"

"But that will keep him in jail over the election!" the leader protested.

"Rats!" said Paddy. "I don't mean Danny. I mean the plaintiff!"—New York Evening Sun.

The Happy Man.

It would be hard, Bildad, to tell who is the happiest man in all the world unless he be the individual who devotes most of his time to his dog, gun and fiddle in winter and to his fishing tackle in summer. His heart is as free from care as his pockets are of coin, and he enthusiastically obeys the injunction to "take no thought of what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink or wherewithal ye shall be clothed." In short, Bildad, he is too happy and contented to be worth a dang to himself or to anybody else.—Marion County (Mo.) Appeal.

DIABETES

Is one of the most cruel maladies of which mankind is subject, the many complications arising from time to time, making life seem almost unbearable. For many diseases, medical, scientific, and physiological knowledge and experience gained from years of deep research, has achieved remarkable results, but, up to now, little has been discovered of practical value in the treatment and cure of Diabetes. In fact, people have begun to look upon the disease as well-nigh incurable. Even in the medical profession can be found doctors who are of the same opinion, regarding sceptically any claim to ameliorate or improve the condition of a diabetic patient.

It can, however, be proved that SANSOL'S ANTIDIABETES lastingly cures all cases of Diabetes. Full particulars can be obtained from the Sansol Mfg. Co., Winnipeg, Man.

The thanks of the public is due to Mr. W. R. Hartshorne, whose expert advice has been of great assistance to Mr. Hay in the arrangements and putting into practice of new ideas, in connection with the exhibits at the museum.

Some of the visitors last night showed practical interest in the museum by presenting curios. Needless to say those in charge highly appreciate this co-operation.

MR. J. L. WELLER WELL KNOWN HERE GETS MOVED UP

St. Catharines, April 24. — Mr. J. L. Weller has received word from the Minister of Railways and Canals that he had been transferred from the charge of the present Welland Canal to take full charge of the completion of surveys and other preliminary work for the proposed new Welland ship canal. It is understood that his salary will be $7,500. Mr. Weller will be succeeded as chief engineer and Superintendent of the present waterway by Mr. W. H. Sullivan, who has successfully acted as his deputy for a number of years. Final borings will be completed as rapidly as possible, so that the specifications can be drawn up and tenders called in the early fall.

Mr. Jack L. Weller, whose promotion is recorded above, is very well known in Peterborough. He is a brother of the late Judge Weller, and though he has been on the Welland Canal for over fifteen years, he started his engineering career on this section of the Trent Valley Canal. Mr. J. H. McClennan, superintendent of the Trent Valley Canal, who knew Mr. Weller personally, when he was on the Trent Canal characterizes him as the best engineer on the continent.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF POWER

The Toronto World in its issue of April 23rd, discusse the attitude of The Examiner of Peterborough in reference to power matters in this district and says—

"The Evening Examiner of Peterboro, which is owned by the Hon. James Stratton, is another Liberal paper that has no faith in public ownership, especially in connection with power development. It publishes a double-column article in Saturday's issue, which concludes with the allegation that municipal operation is unable to realize successfully the application of business principles, which prevail in private corporations. It also says that the Toronto hydro-electric municipal organization is honeycombed with mal-practices The whole article is based on the alleged falldown of Orillia in her experience with power development.

The Peterboro Examiner must be classed with nearly every prominent Liberal paper in this country as being opposed to public ownership. They take their tip from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who said on one occasion in the house that he shuddered at the thought of public ownership in this country. The Hamilton Times, The London Advertiser, The Brantford Expositor, the Toronto Globe, and Toronto Star are no friends of public ownership in regard to electric power. The Montreal Witness has respect, and has championed the conduct of the private companies.

There is one broad fact in answer to all this disbelief in public ownership, and this attempt to break it down, and it is this: that public ownership to-day, incomplete as it is and inexperienced as our municipalities may be in working it out, HAS CUT RATES ALL OVER ONTARIO IN TWO, and made the companies that were in the business before it started treat everyone courteously and give a better service where it gave a poor one. The knockers are busy, and The Evening Examiner of Peterboro is busy, but public ownership has won out.

The World hopes that Sir James Whitney will recognize how united the Liberal party through its newspapers is against public ownership, and how necessary it is that he must continue to champion that cause and line up his party as against the Liberal party on that issue, and how essential it is that he discard, as he will have to discard, those professed friends of his who look with favor on all the attacks on public ownership, and especially the attacks on the hydro-electric proposition of the province with extreme sympathy, and who would like to see Adam Beck buried in the bottom of the sea.

And there are a lot of other Conservatives who are engaged in municipal politics who profess to be believers in Whitney and Whitney's policy, but who by their conduct in municipal affairs show themselves to be anxious to beat the hydro-electric policy whenever it comes up and to advance the interests of private companies. These men cannot call themselves followers of Sir James Whitney. In other words the Conservatives who are in federal, provincial and municipal politics must declare themselves on this issue and stand by it as a party, and so must the Conservative newspapers, and we imagine Sir James Whitney cannot have a better issue to go to the country on, or on which to base the reputation that he will leave behind him, than that he was an earnest supporter of public ownership, and that he persuaded the bulk of his followers to take the same position.

Mr. Rowell is evidently electing to go against public ownership."

Angus McPherson, manager of the Merchants Bank at Markdale, is dead, aged 57

ROW TOOK PLACE AT POLISH WEDDING

The aftermath of a Polish wedding which was solemnized here yesterday resulted in a Police Court case this morning. As in the case of all Polish weddings there was a big celebration held in the afternoon and evening. The guests assembled at Mazur's residence on John street and were making merry when two Pollocks, Wasyl Melko and Feodor Ceowal, who had not been honored with invitations appeared. They refused to leave and Chief Bond was called to the scene. He put them out of the house three or four times but they refused to leave and consequently were taken to the lock up.

This morning they were charged with being disorderly and causing a disturbance. Melko was fined $5.00 and $4.00 costs and Ceowal $1.00 and $4.00 costs.

Melko has since laid information against another Pollock for drawing a knife and wounding him. —Port Hope Guide.

THE DAY WAS HONORED BY ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY

Members and Their Guests Gather Around the Festive Board—Patriotic Addressses With Ald. Gordon as Toast Master—A Message From Merrie England.

In honor of England's Patron Saint, the St. George's Society of Peterborough held a banquet last night in the dining parlors of Coleman Bros.' confectionery store. The room was suitably decorated for the occasion, and besides the Canadian flags that were draped above the chairman, on each napkin was a faithful representation of the Union Jack.

Ald. G. N. Gordon discharged the duties of chairman and toastmaster in a most acceptable manner, and read to the large number of Sons of England present the following message from their native land:

London, Eng., April 23, 1912.

The Royal Society of St. George Dinner, in honor of Old England, is especially associated with our brethren in Canada whom we pledge with deepest fraternal regard. God preserve our Mother Land, our Empire and our King.

Marlborough,
Chairman.

Mr. Gordon opened the toast list in proposing a toast to the King. He said, "It is fitting that on an occasion like this, said to be the birth day and the death day of William Shakespere, that we should meet together and consider the moral, the chivalrous and the true." Mr. Gordon referred to the wreck of the Titanic to show that the ancient courage of the English race was alive in the Englishmen of to-day. In asking the company to honor the toast to the King he said, "He is to us the representative of all British institutions, for right, for honesty and the same chivalrous mottoes that you have in the Society of St. George."

After the toast to the King was duly honored, the toast to "Canada, the land of our adoption," was drunk, and responded to by Mr. F. D. Kerr. In opening Mr. Kerr said, "While I am a Canadian, and am proud of it, I am prouder perhaps to claim that with all citizens of the Empire I am British, owing allegiance to one King, one flag, one tradition." He also referred to the Titanic and her gallant commander Captain Smith, saying that we should keep the Empire afloat, and if it must go down, he for one was content to go down with it. Mr. Kerr was glad that the heroism displayed so unostentatiously on the sinking ship was not a result of discipline but was inherent in the breasts of those on board.

The next toast to "The Day, we Celebrate," was responded to by Mr. F. H. Dobbin. Mr. Dobbin said that in Peterborough the St. George's Society was more than a name, and in referring to England he said, "England is known to-day as the mother of countries, the banker of the world and the arbiter of right and wrong."

Mr. Wm. Guy, Secretary of the Society, responded to the next toast, "The land of our birth." Mr. Guy said that we had good cause to honor England for what it had produced in manufacturing, in literature and in science. If we want to continue the production, we have simply to follow that command, "England expects every man to do his duty."

Mayor Bradburn, in responding to the toast to "Our City" explained the city government and the workings of the different commissions. He explained that the members of the City Trust Commission were trustees for the debenture holders. "We have every dollar of our debenture fund intact and a surplus of nearly $35,000, accumulated by reinvestment." He explained that Peterborough had the lowest tax rate of any city in Ontario except one. In conclusion he extended to every one coming into the city, a hearty welcome.

The toast to "The Imperial Forces' was responded to by Major Walker who showed that peace could only be maintained by being prepared for war. In closing his address he said, "May we ever pray that the Red, White and Blue will flourish, and that the forces will maintain the prestige of Britain and the civilization of the world.

"The Ladies" were honored in the next toast, responded to by Captain W. H. Cluxton. Mr. Cluxton hoped that some of the unfortunate conditions that existed in older lands would be eliminated in Canada, and pointed to the fact that the ladies had the inspiration and power to accomplish this.

The musical part of the program was contributed to by Mr. R. J. Devey, Mr. Harold Lee, Mr. Walter Stocker and Mr. Thompson. Mr. Johns gave a patriotic recitation in his usual impressive style and was heartily received by the audience.

The patriotism and brotherly feeling exhibited at the banquet was worthy of the day that was being celebrated, and the evening was brought to a close by the singing of "God Save the King."

"EXCUSE ME" IS COMING HERE

Your turn to laugh is coming, so get ready for it. It will be the laugh of youn life, and it will be at the Grand next Tuesday, April 30th, when Henry W. Savage offers Rupert Hughes famous farce, "Excuse Me," that has a record of nine months in New York, six months in Chicago and four months in Boston. This is the farce that at the Alexandra Theatre in Toronto the week of January 29 last, and at the Princess in Montreal a fortnight later sent the public in those cities into the heartiest paroxysms of laughter ever created by any play. "Excuse Me" is a whole train load of laughter of the choicest and most select variety of a new brand of merriment. It will tickle every tissue in the system until one is amazed that there was so much laughter in him. This farce has developed hitherto undiscovered kinds of mirth. It is as jolly and merry and witty and amusing, and at the same time as interesting a play as has ever been seen, and that is the opinion everywhere. It is a new idea, too, which makes it all the better. The entire action takes place on a railroad train, and the scenes are in the Pullman cars on a two-thousand-mile, four-day journey across the continent, which means that two thousand miles of merriment and four days of fun are squeezed into the two hours and forty-five minutes of the farce. It is a mile-a-minute express train, and the fun runs just as fast as the train. It doesn't stop. It is all clean, wholesome fun, too, the kind that pleases every person. "Excuse Me" has been a tremendous hit everywhere. In New York it ran all last season, last summer and well into the present season, which proves to be the real thing in the way of comedy. There is a genuine play in this farce, with adventures and romance and sentiment, though it is all in the guise of merriment. It is an out-and-out New York success, and a guaranteed Henry W. Savage offering. The local public rarely have a chance to enjoy an offering of this calibre and it shows appreciation of this one.

GIRLS MADE PRESENTATION OF CLUB BAG

After the very successful concert, given by the P.C.I. students on Friday night, for which much of the credit is due to the Glee Club, and Mr. G. A. Ferguson of the P.C.I. staff, who trained the organization, the girls of the Glee Club presented Mr. Ferguson with a handsome leather club bag.

The young ladies felt that never in the history of that harmonious body had they received more faithful and effectual attention than Mr. Ferguson had given them, and they took this means of showing their appreciation of his efforts.

Mr. Ferguson, on receiving the token of their gratitude towards him replied in a neat speech, thanking the donors for the honor they were bestowing upon him and at the same time expressing the wish that the glee club would meet with even more success in the future than in the past

CANVASSERS HAD BUSY NIGHT VISITING HOMES

Some funny experiences were encountered by the army of canvassers who went the rounds of the city last night, ascertaining information on the percentage of those between ten and eighteen years of age, who attended Sunday school. One lady told a youthful inquirer that she would be glad if they would send a policeman around to get her boy out on Sunday.

The canvassers worked hard last night, and the excellent organization of the workers greatly facilitated their operations.

Only houses known to have children residing therein between ten and eighteen years of age were called upon. No instances were reported where canvassers were turned away, without their questions being considered. About one hundred and thirty cards have been turned in so far, but this is a very small proportion of those filled in, and which have to be left with the secretary.

TRESPASS CASE IN COUNTY COURT

Owing to the absence of County Magistrate Edmison, the hearing of the case of alleged trespass, charged by Fred Easson against James Dickson, of Keene, was argued this afternoon at county court before Police Magistrate Dumble.

The plaintiff claims that Dickson wilfully trespassed upon his property at Keene in the pursuit of muskrats.

The case was opened this morning at 11 o'clock, but was adjourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

Messrs. F. D. Kerr and G. N. Gordon are acting for the principals in the case.

"The Seashore" a forty-eight page booklet with a striking cover and over 100 illustrations, has just appeared describing the New London Districts of Connecticut on the line of the Central Vermont Railway, which promises to be an even more popular summer resort for Canadians in general and Montrealers in particular, than even Old Orchard was, in its palmiest days. Anyone who is worried over the annual "summer vacation problem" will find interest if not inspiration in the contents. Just ho wvaried the resources of this new territory are can be realized from the statement that they include deep sea fishing and sailing at New London, river boating on the Thames, salt water bathing and sand for the youngsters at Ocean Beach, Watch Hill and Block Island, as well as golf and tennis at Fisher's Island.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

Ottawa, April 24.—On May 5 the Ottawa ball team will play its first game, an exhibition affair, with the Adrian club of the Southern Michigan league. The game will be played at Adrian, the locals taking the jump from Chatham to Adrian, playing on the 5th and 6th and then returning to the training grounds. There is a possibility that the team will also play exhibition games with other teams in the Southern Michigan League while on the return trip to Chatham.

The Ottawas have secured Fred Herbert, a right-hand twirler. Herbert is said to be a wonder, in fact, Louie Cook prophesies that he will be drafted this season. He should be the star of the Ottawa twirling staff, which will be a big order with Draper on the team. The locals now have seven pitchers on their string, and the weeding out process will commence as soon as the team arrives at Chatham. Joe Lockhart, formerly of the University of California team, is now living in the vicinity of Chatham and wants a try-out. He is a first baseman. Lockhart will be given a trial at his own expense and will be tendered a contract if he makes good. Another pitcher, Sterling, from the Southern Michigan League, wants a chance with the locals. He will also appear at Chatham and attempt to impress Louie Cook with the ability enough to receive a contract. Transportation was sent out to the players who have contracts, something like twenty tickets being secured. The men are scattered all over the country. Drapper is down in Roanoke, while Herbert is in St. Louis and the others are all some distance from Chatham, Ont., to which point the transportation reads.

London, April 24.—Just one more week and the members of the London Canadian League ball team for 1912 will report in this city and the local fans, who are curious to see just what kind of a crowd it is, will have plenty of opportunity of sizing them up at Tecumseh park. Just one more week and Manager Frank Bowerman will begin that weeding out process which finally shapes a bunch of would-be ball players into a pennant-winning organization.

The players are just as anxious to get started as the fans are to see them, and with the weather man on his good behavior and the grounds in good shape, there should be a great deal of rivalry for the different positions on the team.

Riverside Park still resembles a lake, and a gull took the opportunity this morning to have a fine swim. The water is very high and it will be sometime before it will be in proper condition for ball.

Berlin, April 24—Twin City Ministerial Association, at its meeting here to-day passed resolution strongly opposing expenditure of public money for the purpose of improving the athletic grounds at Victoria Park as proposed by the park management. It is contended that the improvements will tend to professionalize all forms of sport and amusement in order to create revenue.

SCHEDULE FOR JUNIOR AND SENIOR SERIES OF PUBLIC SCHOOL LEAGUE

In the Public School Baseball League the two Centrals will alone battle for honors, and the first game in this series will be played on Friday, May 3, with the Centrals meeting the South Centrals on the latter's grounds. The senior teams will play a double schedule, while the juniors will be single.

The senior schedule is:

May 3—Centrals at South Centrals.

May 10—South Centrals at Centrals.

May 17—Centrals at South Centrals.

May 31—South Centrals at Centrals.

JUNIOR SERIES.

May 1—South Central at Queen Alexandra, Central at West Ward, East City at King Edward.

May 6—King Edward at Queen Alexandra, East City at Central, West Ward at South Central.

May 8—Central at King Edward, East City at South Central, Queen Alexandra at West Ward.

May 13—East City at West Ward, Central at Queen Alexandra, King Edward at South Central.

May 15—South Central at Central, West Ward at King Edward, East City at Queen Alexandra.

May 20—Queen Alexandra at South Central, West Ward at Central, King Edward at East City.

May 22—Queen Alexandra at King Edward, Central at East City, South Central at West Ward.

May 29—West Ward at East City, Queen Alexandra at Central, South Central at King Edward.

June 3—Central at South Central, King Edward at West Ward, Queen Alexandra at East City.

As soon as the Oval is ready for the season some of the games will be played there.

PRIZE FOR HOME RUN.

To the first player in the junior or senior series who clouts out a home run, the Review will present a glove or a pair of baseball shoes. A home run made by hitting the ball over the fence will not count. The prize will be given on the decision of the umpire.

SPORTS AT Y. M. C. A.

The swimming campaign at the Y.M.C.A. is going on merrily. The school boys are certainly taking advantage of it, and are turning out regularly in good numbers. It looks as if there would be a big run on the fine swimmers button which will be given to the boys who are able to swim 50 feet at the close of the campaign.

Peterborough must be fairly well stocked with men who can swim. At least that is the opinion that one would arrive at judging from the attendance at the men's swimming classes. So far very few of the men who cannot swim have gathered enough courage to make a start at the art of swimming. Now, if you want to be taught to swim the Y.M.C.A. have made it possible for you to do so, so that it is "up to you" to make use of this opportunity.

Love may not make the world go round, but it seems to make a lot of people giddy.

CENTRAL SCHOOL BOYS ELECT THEIR OFFICERS

The Central school boys held their first baseball meeting on Monday evening, to organize the club for the coming season. The election of officers took place and resulted as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Mr. T. F. Matthews.
Pres.—Mr. R. F. Downey.
Vice-Pres.—Mr. Hagerman.
Manager—Mr. Neale.
Sec.-Treas.—A. Lewis.

The manager Mr. Neale picked a number of boys whom he has in view for the Junior team, and to-night they will play a picked team headed by "Professor" Cavanah. It is understood that Cavanah will not play on the juniors this year on account of the objections raised by the other clubs. His substitute will be a player from the fourth class.

The Centrals are getting right into the game and from now on will have baseball practices regularly and often. The Central school will have a team in both the senior and junior series.

Congress has been asked to vote $5,000 for special medals for the crew of the Carpathia.

Cause of His Distress.

A Scot and his friend were spending a few days sightseeing in London. While crossing one of the busy thoroughfares near Trafalgar Square the friend had the misfortune to be run over. Sandy was very excited, so much indeed, that one of the bystanders asked him if the victim was a near relative.

"Na, na," replied Sandy in despairing tones, "but he has on a pair o' ma breeks!"

TWO GIFTS FROM A KING.

A Story of Frederick William I. and Locatelli, the Violinist.

The severity of the Prussian king, Frederick William I., especially toward the son who became Frederick the Great, has given him a perhaps undeserved reputation for sternness. Anecdotes that reveal gentler qualities are related in "The House of Hohenzollern." One anecdote in particular shows that Frederick William could even take a rebuke good humoredly.

In Berlin assemblies and dinner parties were often given, and the king was a frequent guest at the houses of the foreign envoys and at the houses of his own subjects. He was always most amiable on these occasions and, with his jokes and gaiety, quite the life of the evening.

When the King of Poland, Augustus the Strong, visited Berlin he was accompanied by the famous violinist, Locatelli. Although Frederick William hated virtuosi, he was obliged to listen to this artist, who appeared in a coat of blue velvet embroidered with silver.

"The fellow looks like a minister of war at least!" the king ejaculated. But, wishing to be civil, he sent him 20 thalers by a servant.

The artist sent the king his homage and thanks, but handed the money as a gratuity to the servant who had brought it.

On hearing of this Frederick William was indignant and complained to Augustus of the impudence of his fiddler. Augustus, however, pointed out that an artist of the eminence of Locatelli was accustomed to receiving presents of gold watches, snuff boxes and diamond rings.

Frederick William therefore decided to have a laugh at him. A second concert was arranged, after which the Prussian king himself gave the artist a snuff box filled with ducats and added, "You are so magnificently lavish that I should prefer on this occasion to earn the gratuity myself."

But the resourceful artist was not to be overmatched. He replied that such a present from such a king was too weighty for him to part with.

Women as Carriers.

Erectness of carriage and grace of figure are the two most noticeable characteristics of the Italian woman, yet the fact remains that she owes them largely to the custom of her country, which decrees that she shall act as a beast of burden.

In the mountainous districts the women of Italy carry everything imaginable upon their heads. They use a piece of cloth, generally a brightly-colored handkerchief, which they twist into a ring-like mat, placing it on the top of the head.

It is no uncommon sight to see a woman with a cask of wine upon her head, and the material for making the roads is often carried in the same manner.

After a day in the woods an Italian peasant woman will carry home faggots on her head, and sand, water, dried leaves for fuel, and building materials are similarly transported.

Mules are occasionally used, but it is seldom that Italian men are seen acting as carriers in the mountainous parts.

Opening Letters In Russia.

Ten per cent. of the letters passing through the post in Russia are opened by the authorities on Government orders. Every town has post-office experts who have made letter-opening a study. Some kinds of envelopes can be steamed open without leaving any traces, and this simple operation is finished by reburnishing the flap with a bone instrument. In the case of a seal a matrix is taken by means of new bread before breaking the wax. When other methods fail the envelope is placed between pieces of wood, the edge projecting one-twentieth of an inch. The edge of the envelope is then flattened, then roughened and split open. After examination of the contents a hair line of strong white gum is applied and the edges are united under pressure.

To Find the North.

Of course you know that iron will sink in water, because it is so much heavier, but if it is very small and highly polished, as in the form of a new needle, you can lay it gently on the surface of a basin of water and it will float. If you will rub the needle with a toy magnet before placing it on the water the needle will not only float, but will gradually work its way round until it lies due north and south. The north to which it points is the magnetic north, of course, and not the north pole.

Applying the Cure.

A hard drinker was informed by his doctor that he could be cured if every time he felt that he must have a drink he would immediately take something to eat instead. The man followed the advice and was cured, but the habit of asking for food had become so fixed with him that he was once nearly locked up as a lunatic. He was stopping at a hotel and, hearing a great commotion in the room next to his, he peered over the transom to see what the matter was. He saw, and rushed madly down to the office and shouted to the clerk: "The man in 153 has shot himself! Ham and egg sandwich, please."

How to Preserve Old Photos.

A unique way to preserve old photos is as follows: Put the photographs into clean hot water; very soon the pictures loosen and may be easily removed from the cards. When dry, either trim down to economize space or carefully cut away the background entirely. Mount them in a scrap book or a book made especially for kodak pictures. You will then have a book with which you can spend many happy moments looking over familiar scenes and faces.—National Magazine.

YOU CAN BE ABSOLUTELY SURE OF VALUES

If you carefully read the store advertisements and follow them in your buying.

Merchants advertise certain lines because they know these lines will advertise their stores. Because there is something about certain goods, they are put in conspicuous places and the people are told about them. It may be the exclusiveness or newness of design, it may be an unusual quality, it may be an attractive price.

But there is at least one definite, sure reason why a merchant advertises an article and is willing to stake the reputation of his store upon it.

Therefore, when you see an article advertised in THE REVIEW, depend upon it, that article is good value, as good value as can be obtained in that particular store.

WHY A WATCH WEARS OUT

Neglect is responsible for most Watches going wrong. A Watch should be thoroughly overhauled, at least once a year. Dust collecting in a Watch causes it to run dry, the grit will then wear away the delicate bearings. If you own a good watch, better be on the safe side — Bring it to our Repair Department where it will receive Skilled Attention.

NO DIP NETS

Suckers Must be Caught With Hook and Line

Fishery and Game Inspector Watt wishes to have it thoroughly understood that the use of dip nets is prohibited.

Heretofore, permission has been given to use the dipnets in the search for suckers, but the lid is on tight now.

The following is the order-in-council which the fishermen must live up to.

Upon the recommendation of the Honorable, the Minister of Public Works, the committee of council advise that, pursuant to the provisions of sections 25 (a and e) of the Ontario Game and Fisheries Act, residents of the province, be prohibited from fishing in any provincial waters, except by hook and line without having first obtained a lease or license, granting them permission so to do.

This season, permission is not given.

LOCAL NEWS ITEMS

The Ladies' Aid of St. Andrews will meet to sew in the church parlors, Thursday, April 25th, at 2.30 o'clock.

In our report of St. John's adjourned Vestry meeting a motion conveying the hearty thanks of St. John's Church to Mr. John E. Belcher, C. E., was inadvertantly overlooked. To further mark St. John's appreciation of Mr. Belcher's many and valuable services, the motion was ordered to be formally entered in the minutes.

An important railway extension was announced in Brantford recently when the Grand Trunk filed a route map for its main line cut-off through the Ontario Institute for the Blind grounds and across the Grand River to its Tilsonburg branch a distance of five miles in all. This cut-off will not only open up a large new industrial district but will also eliminate 20 level crossings around the city of Brantford. A four-span bridge over 300 feet in length will be thrown across the Grand, and the total cost of the work is roughly estimated at $250,000.

Wealth may not bring a man happiness, but it surrounds him with a multitude of would-be friends.

YOUTH WHO MASQUERADED IN FEMININE ATTIRE WAS FINED

William Anthony who, yesterday morning, was remanded for one week on the charge of being drunk while on the blacklist, appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning, and the case was decided. He was fined $10, or thirty days in jail. A young man from Havelock was charged with being drunk in a public place. His Worship imposed the fine of $2.

WON'T DO IT AGAIN

A local young man was arrested last night for masquerading in feminine costume. He walked around George street in an attire that would do credit to a comedian on a vaudeville stage and was a great source of amusement to many of the Peterboro people, until his fun was cut short by an officer.

He appeared before the Magistrate this morning, charged with being disorderly in a public place and was fined $1 for his idea of pleasure or excitement.

CHARGE NOT PROVEN

M. MacRoberts, who was charged yesterday of supplying liquor to a blacklister was on hand to receive his medicine, as judgment was reserved yesterday.

His Worship considered the evidence was not strong enough to convict him although there were many points that were not in his favor.

SUCCESSFUL OPENING OF MUSEUM HELD AT THE PUBLIC LIBRARY

It was estimated that over six hundred people attended the opening of the museum at the Public Library last evening, and from eight o'clock to ten, there was a constant stream of visitors. A large number of the elite of the city were present, indicating a genuine interest and pleasure in the attractive distribution and arrangement of the various museum departments. It was evident that a large percentage of those who came to see, had never before had the pleasure of viewing the hundreds of rare exhibits stored in the museum, as many enthusiastic exclamations were heard during the evening.

The fair sex predominated in the gathering, a goodly representation of students and young people being present. Everything is arranged with an eye to neatness, and the classification of the various varieties has been most effectively worked out. The museum occupies the stairway, leading to the second floor, the large room to the right on this floor, and the main hall way, so that there is no attempt at over-crowding.

The presence of the Grand Opera House orchestra, added materially to the success of the opening, the musicians being very liberal with selections. About one hundred and fifty of those who were present, registered their names.

Mr. T. A. S. Hay, the energetic curator, received many congratulations on the success which attended the opening, and for his earnest endeavors in connection with it.

Mr. Hay will be pleased to receive donations of any article which is worthy a place in the museum, donators being assured that their gifts will be carefully guarded and looked after. Many local people it is certain, have articles in their possession which they prize highly, owing to their history and associations which, if exhibited at the museum, would be extremely interesting to visitors. This class of donations are solicited.

The museum is absolutely free to the public, and is open every day from one to six in the afternoons, and on Saturdays from one o'clock to ten.

POLICEMAN SPOTTED FIRE AT EARLY HOUR THIS MORNING

At 3.20 o'clock this morning a slight fire broke out in the home of Mr. Wm Greene, 326 Water street. The occupants on either side of the building, which is a terrace, had noticed about ten o'clock last night that an unusual quantity of smoke was coming from that house, but were unable to locate the cause. This morning, however, the flames burst out in the cellar of the house. The smoke was seen coming out of the cellar grating by the policeman on duty, who rang in an alarm.

The fire brigade responded and by the use of chemicals extinguished the blaze. As the house did not have to be flooded with water the damages will be slight. The flooring of the cellar in Mr. Greene's house is of wood and it is built upon 6 inches of sawdust which separate it from the ground. It is thought that a carelessly dropped match ignited the sawdust. The floor of the cellar was badly burned but no damage was done to the upper part of the house.

MEMBERS OF THE REGIMENT INVITED TO "AT HOME" OF DAUGHTERS OF EMPIRE

Chaplain of Regiment Also Referred to the Late Disaster.

After orders were read last night at the armories, Chaplain Davidson was called to address the regiment, and in remarks of explanation, he told of the formation of the 57th Chapter, Daughters of the Empire, and referred to the "At Home" to be held in the recreation rooms of the armories next Tuesday evening.

The organization, he said, was a military Chapter in connection with the regiment to help forward the patriotic spirit of each individual member and of the regiment, and also the city as a whole. It was important that the wives and sisters of the men and officers of the regiment should be members of this splendid patriotic organization. In pursuance of the work, the Chapter had arranged an "At Home" for Tuesday afternoon and evening, and all men of the regiment were especially invited to take part, at the conclusion of the weekly drill.

The affair was mainly for the purpose of social intercourse and to bring the Chapter and its members into active contact with the regiment.

Before concluding, Mr. Davidson added a few words in reference to the late national disaster. The members of the regiment could not well be the same men as before this great event. We had all seen a vision and what had been done could be done again. The heroic conduct of the men on the Titanic, their steadfast devotion to duty up to the end, should be an inspiration to every man. It was for us all to accustom ourselves to the path of duty now, and in our ordinary lives, and especially in all details of military work so that in times of emergency we might be able to bear our part faithfully.

VIOLIN RECITAL AT CONSERVATORY

A charming violin recital was held at the Conservatory of Music last evening, given by Mr. William Wilson, pupil of Miss Julia Choate, assisted by Mrs. Jardine, reader and Mr. Asa Huycke, bass soloist. The attendance was fairly large.

Mr. Wilson rendered several difficult violin selections in a confident and finished manner. A duet "Concertante (No. 4," (Danela,) by Miss Choate and Mr. Wilson, was very effectively rendered.

Mrs. A. D. Jardine gave a very popular reading, and Mr Huycke in fine voice sang a selected number, both being heartily applauded.

CONFERENCE AT Y.M.C.A.

Meeting Was Addressed by Dr. Brown of New York

"The relation of the physical department of the Y.M.C.A. to the Association, to the Church, the school and the community," was the subject of a very timely and instructive address, delivered last night in the Y.M.C.A. at the Physical Directors' conference, by Dr. John Brown of the International Y.M.C.A. Committee New York City.

While the conference was not largely attended by physical instructors, yet the address was greatly appreciated and enjoyed by the forty or more present, interested in physical work. The leaders of the local "Y" were present, also Mr. H. O. McGuire, of Ottawa.

Mr. McGuire returned to Ottawa on the midnight C.P.R., and Dr. Brown left on the local this morning for Toronto, where he will speak to the Toronto Central Leaders' Corps at their annual banquet this evening.

Mr. Baskin intends to build a hotel having a frontage of 11 feet, which will greatly improve the appearance of our village. His men are at work, preparing for the foundation and the fact is that Mr. Baskin is at the head of the undertaking, is a guarantee that no time will be lost in pushing the building along to a speedy conclusionn.

TERRIBLE RESULT OF BLOOD POISON

After Three Operations Zam-Buk Was Tried and Proved Successful.

If people would only use Zam-Buk for chronic sores, blood-poison, etc., before permitting an operation, scores of limbs would be saved.

Mr. Robt. Patterson, of North Pelham, Welland Co., Ont., writes: "My daughter, Annie, had blood-poison in her finger. The doctor operated twice on the finger, but did not obtain the desired result, and a third operation was considered necessary.

"Three doctors were present at this operation, but after it had been performed the wound did not heal. Try as we would we could not get anything to close the wound.

"We at last tried Zam-Buk, and it was really wonderful to watch how this balm healed the wound. Each day there was a marked improvement. First the wound in the palm of the hand closed, and then the finger which had been bad so long began to heal. The diseased flesh seemed to rise out of the wound and then drop off, and new healthy flesh formed from below, pushing off the disease tissue. In a short time the wound was completely healed. Had we applied Zam-Buk at first we might have saved the finger.

"We had another proof of Zam-Buk's power in the case of my son. When two years old he had his hand badly mangled. One finger had to be amputated and it left a running sore for some months. This wound, also, was finally healed by Zam-Buk."

For chronic sores, blood-poison, ulcers, abscesses, scalp sores, piles, eruptions, inflamed patches, eczema, cuts, burns, bruises, and all skin injuries and diseases Zam-Buk is without equal. 50c. box all druggists and stores, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Have you tried Zam-Buk Soap? 25c. tablet.

THE WRONG PLACE TO GET DRUNK

Two natives of the village of Norwood, appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning to answer to the charge of being drunk. They pleaded not guilty and were remanded until this afternoon, when the evidence given by P.C. Meagher that he arrested these two men at 2.25 a.m. this morning, under the influence of liquor, convinced the magistrate that they were guilty, and he imposed the usual fine of $2.

Myopia means near sight. When an eye is myopic or near sighted the image looked at does not focus on the nerve, the eyeball therefore is too long. Now, as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball,

CAPTAIN OF MOUNT TEMPLE SAYS HE SAW NO SIGNALS

Captain Moore and Officers Will Testify Before a Commissioner With Regard to Movements—Hon. G. E. Foster Arranges With Senator Smith — Fifth Officer Lowe Tells Graphic Story of His Efforts.

Washington, April 25.—Harold G. Lowe, fifth officer of the sunken Titanic, yesterday told the Senate investigating committee his part in the struggle of the survivors for life following the catastrophe. His testimony developed that with a volunteer crew, he rescued four men from the water, saved a sinking collapsible lifeboat by towing it astern of his, and took off twenty men and one woman from the bottom of an overturned boat. Every one of these under his charge he landed safely on the Carpathia.

From first to last Lowe's story showed that he played the man. Ordered away in charge of lifeboat No. 14, he packed it to its capacity on the top deck, and, fearing that some might attempt to jump into it while it was descending, kept a fusilade from his revolver. Once afloat, he took charge of a flotilla of small craft, which eventually were picked up by the rescue ship without the loss of a life.

Competing in interest with the day's testimony was the interchange of telegrams between Senator Wm. Alden Smith, chairman, and the acting Premier of Canada, George E. Foster.

The latter told of the docking of the steamer Mount Temple at St. John, N.B., with passengers aboard who claimed to have sent the Titanic sink. It was thought possible the Mount Temple was the ship that was only five miles from the White Star liner when she took her final plunge.

Senator Smith has requested that the depositions of the officers and crew of the Mount Temple be sent to him. In addition, he accepted the offer of Dr. F. C. Quitzman of Toronto to appear before the committee. Dr. Quitzman was one of the passengers who said they saw the Titanic sink.

Acting Premier Foster's telegram, dated yesterday, gave the version of Captain Moore of the Mount Temple, and added:

"Under these circumstances it does not seem necessary to detain boat, due to sail Friday evening. If commission can be appointed to take captain's evidence, will no doubt be examined later by British commission."

In reply Senator Smith despatched the following:

"Telegram received. I will greatly appreciate it if deposition of captain of the vessel, Mount Temple, which is scheduled to sail from St. John, N.B., Friday, could be taken by commissioners, as suggested by you, and forwarded to me at Washington, relative to the movements of his ship on Sunday evening, April 14, stating relative positions to Titanic and Carpathia, together with a detailed report of all wireless messages sent and received."

The committee also received a telegram signed by John H. Moore, master of Mount Temple; A. H. Sargent, chief officer; H. Heald, second officer; and J. Durrant, the Marconi operator, dated at West St. John, N.B., yesterday, practically repeating the information contained in the Premier's message, and adding that the Mount Temple did not see the Titanic's lights.

The names of the passengers who claimed they saw the lights of the Titanic, the message said, were not known.

Captain Moore states that a message asking aid was received from the Titanic and that he responded, but owing to the obstruction of ice, his steamer did not arrive until after the Carpathia did, and that the latter sent a message that aid wasn't required.

Captain Moore's Statement.

St. John, N.B., April 25.—The rumor that the steamer Mount Temple was within five miles of the Titanic when she sank and without heeding signals of distress, steamed away, leaving 1,600 souls to perish, is indignantly denied by Captain Moore, who was in command of the vessel. His statement is as follows:

"We received a wireless message after midnight Sunday from the Titanic, stating that she had struck an iceberg and to come at once. We turned about at 12.30 o'clock and steamed back to position given us; arriving there at 4.30 o'clock. We encountered so much ice, however, that we stayed until daylight. We cruised about but could not see any sign of the ship. About 6 a.m. on an immense field of ice studded thickly with bergs, we saw the Carpathia. We also saw the Californian, which was to the northward of us, steaming west, then coming down to the southward, and she met us. She did not communicate anything. At 8.46 o'clock, ship's time, we received a general message that the Carpathia had picked up twenty boats. We asked if they wanted assistance, but got no reply. Shortly after we received another general message stating, 'Nothing more can be done; no need to stand by.' We then left the scene and proceeded on our way."

When he turned his ship and rushed back among immense fields of ice he was doing so at a great risk, for he had on board 1,461 passengers, besides his crew. Nevertheless, he promptly answered the call for help.

Dismissed Telegraph Suit.

London, April 25.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Privy Council has dismissed with costs the appeal of the Reid-Newfoundland Co. versus the Anglo-American Telegraph. The dispute was concerning what messages the appellant were to transmit over the respondents' special wire.

Charges Excessive.

Ottawa, April 25.—A matter relative to express charges, which was not covered by the judgment in the express inquiry, will be made the subject of a special hearing by the Railway Commission shortly. It concerns the excessive rates which the board on investigation has discovered are charged by the express companies in connection with C.O.D. shipments, and it was first brought to the board's notice by a complaint made by a Napanee merchant of an overcharge of 65 cents.

The statement goes on to say that formerly express companies, after collecting C.O.D. shipments, made return of the cash to the shipper, basing the charge for this service upon merchandise rates. For some years, however, instead of remitting and carrying back the cash, the agent at the delivery office has issued express orders, posting these direct to the shipper at the old merchandise rates instead of the scale of charges for express orders.

"This cannot be defended," says the board. "The present scale of charges is excessive."

MANY THOUSANDS ARE COMING

Toronto, April 25.—Word was received yesterday by the Toronto committee that the Brotherhood Crusaders from Great Britain to the convention here, which begins May 11, will come 150 strong.

Secretary Ausman of the local committee states that about 75,000 members of the Brotherhood Association are now in Canada. The parent organization in Great Britain and Ireland has 750,000.

Sir James Whitney has been invited to preside at the Massey Hall meeting on Sunday afternoon, May 12, and Mayor Geary at the banquet to visiting delegates.

Simultaneous with the organization of a Dominion Brotherhood Association, Australia and New Zealand are this spring forming similar brotherhood federations.

CARRIED TWINS' BODIES IN BOX

Montreal, April 25.—David Gareau, alias St. Onge, aged 76, was arrested Wednesday at St. Bazil. It is alleged that when his niece gave birth to twins, who died two days after birth, he hid them away in a box. He says he journeyed to Montrealto have them buried here, and handed the box over to a man who said he would see to the burying, for which he charged two dollars.

Petrolea Man on Trial.

Port Huron, Mich., April 25.—Medical testimony occupied the greater part of both sessions yesterday in the trial of George Esson of Petrolea, Ont., who is charged with the murder of Thomas Major of this city. It was evident that the defence will endeavor to show that the major's death was due to natural causes, probably kidney trouble.

Was Engaged to Marry.

Hamilton, April 52.—A romance in which John Wilson, the 70-year-old man, whose head was cut off by a Grand Trunk train on Saturday morning last, figured, was unfolded yesterday when Mrs. Margaret Ellen Taylor, of Valleyfield, Que., arrived here yesterday morning expecting to be married to Wilson.

She called at his boarding-house and collapsed when she heard about his death.

Wilson met Mrs. Taylor on board the Corsican in March last and proposed to her and was accepted. She has ten children in Canada and the States.

UP GO THE MINE WAGES

New York, April 25.—The sub-committee, which is arranging the terms of settlement in the antharcite region, has raised the wage increase, it is reported, from 5 to 6 per cent., and may further increase it. It is said that the operators will agree to abolish the conciliatory board and substitute a plan by which the grievances will be settled directly with the men.

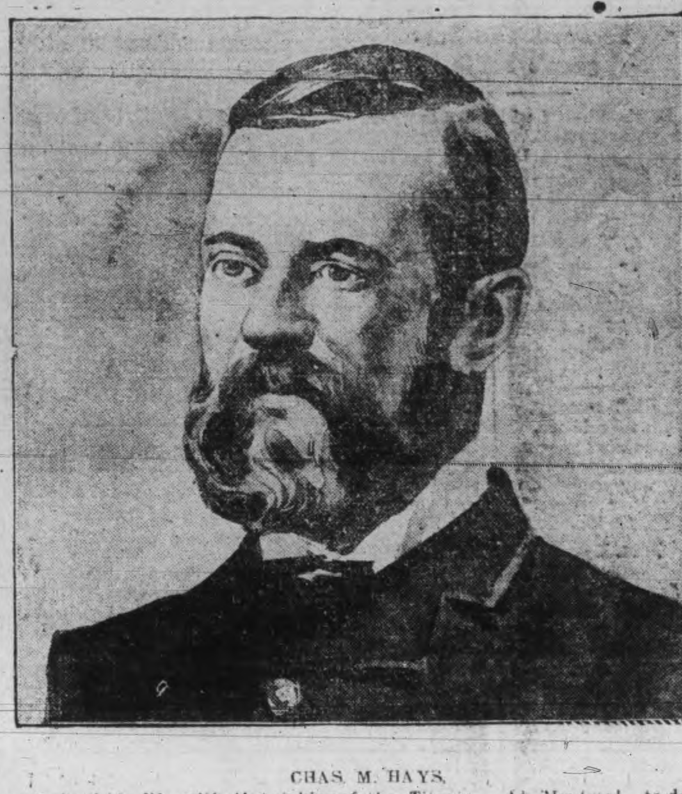
The sliding scale will remain in force, but the base, it is reported, will be increased from $4.50 to $4.75.

The operators are said to have informed the miners' committee of their intention to raise the price of coal.

It is further stated there will be no eight-hour day and no other concessions.

Connaughts to Travel Some.

Ottawa, April 25.—An official itinerary of the year's program of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught announces a visit to Toronto, May 16 and visits to London and Guelph, May 29 and 30. June will be spent in Quebec and New Brunswick fishing. July 7 the Winnipeg Exhibition will be opened, the party returning east towards the end of the month to tour the Maritime Provinces. After opening Toronto Exhibition, the Connaughts will go west, visiting cities along the north shore, and proceeding to the Pacific coast, returning to Ottawa about the end of October.



CHAS. M. HAYS,

who lost his life with the sinking of the Titanic. At Montreal to-day memorial service was held out of respect to the late President of the Grand Trunk Railway System, and at 11.30 o'clock the entire system was stopped for five minutes. Recognition of respect was shown by the local employees of the company at the time decided on.

PRISONER BREAKS OUT OF TORONTO POLICE STATION

Arrested After a Vigorous Chase, Norman Crysler, Charged With Horse Stealing, Boasts That Police Cannot Hold Him — Tears Up Floor and Gets Clear of Wilton Avenue Station Officers.

Toronto, April 25.—By ripping up the flooring of Wilton avenue police station, Norman Crysler, an alleged horse thief, escaped from custody shortly before 9 o'clock last night. At an early hour this morning he was still at large, with the police completely mystified.

Crysler was arrested after a hair-raising chase yesterday afternoon, participated in by Detectives Murray and Sockett and the accused. On a warrant charging theft of a horse worth $225 the two detectives went after their man, who, they had learned, had stabled the horse on De Grassi street. When the detectives arrived at the stable they found Crysler trying to close a deal which would have brought him $60 for the animal. When Crysler saw the detectives, he promptly ran the horse back to its stall and in some way eluded the officers.

Murray and Sockett gave chase, but Crysler was fleet-footed. He had a lead of 100 yards on the officers before they knew he had vanished. The chase covered many city blocks, principally through lanes and alleys, over fences and sheds. Altogether, it was a most gruelling sprint.

After a mile had been run with the detectives still following up, and all pretty well exhausted, a policeman on Pape avenue loomed up. Attracted by the shouts of the detectives from somewhere up a lane the policeman swung around and caught Crysler who was then taken to No. 4 station.

"You have me all right, but not for long," panted Crysler to the constable. "The whole police department can't hold me."

He was placed in the corridor. Two hours later, at 8 o'clock, P. C. McKee carried a loaf of bread to the prisoner.

At 8.40 two friends of Crysler entered the station with a tray covered with food of all sorts and asked that it be given him. P. C. McKee took the food to the large cell, but Crysler was nowhere to be seen. Over against the wall a large patch of the floor had been torn up. Crysler had crawled through this hole and had managed, although the going must have been difficult, to work his way under the boards to the cellar, which was just sufficiently large to accommodate a furnace. He then made his escape through a coal shute.

This is the second time Crysler has broken jail. A year ago he was placed in the Whitby lock-up, charged with stealing a launch. He was only there a few hours when he got away by making a hole in the roof. He was later arrested and taken back to face the charge. He is about 24 years of age, a steamfitter by trade and lives in Chedoka, near Hamilton.

Germany Gets Busy.

Berlin, April 25.—A conference of Government officials and representatives of the shipping companies and maritime societies, in order to study the problem of insuring the safety of steamers and to obtain material on which international regulation of the question can be based, had been convoked here at the personal instance of the German Emperor. The sessions were opened yesterday afternoon at the Ministry of the Interior.

The most important points on the program of the conference are an increase in the number of lifeboats and the regulations concerning wireless telegraphy and watertight compartments.

The Emperor is displaying the liveliest personal interest in the subject, and is in constant telegraphic communication with the officials.

Toronto's Dirty Streets.

London, Ont., April 25.—"If London's streets were as dirty as Toronto's, there would be a riot immediately."

Such was Mayor Graham's comment on the condition of the streets of the Queen City, through which he passed yesterday morning on his way from Montreal.

"Montreal's streets are in a terrible condition, and Toronto's not an awful lot better," said his worship.

ITALIANS NOW HOLD THE STRAITS

Special To The Review.

Constantinople, April 25 — Strong Italian forces to-day landed on half a dozen islands immediately opposite the entrance to the Dardanelles thus gaining complete control of the straits.

FIVE YEARS FOR THROWING ACID IN MAN'S FACE

Special to the Review.

Toronto, April 25.—Five years in the penitentiary was the sentence imposed to-day upon Madeline Lamonde for throwing carbolic acid in Gustave Pilliken's face.

The prisoner told a story of having left a good home in Montreal at the instance of Pilliken, who wrote, asking her to come to Toronto, with the promise that he would provide a good place for her.

Pilliken, she said, failed to carry out his promises. When the sentence was pronounced the girl became hysterical.

McCARTHY PASSES AWAY

He Had Been Ill For Some Months But His Friends Had Hoped That He Would Live to See Home Rule Bill Passed—Rose From Reporter to Editor, Then to Novelist and Historian—An Active Nationalist.

London, April 25.—Mr. Justin McCarthy, novelist and historian, and for many years a member of Parliament, died last night at Folkestone. He had been ill throughout the winter and spring. His daughter had acted as his nurse, and friends had hoped that he would live to see the fruition of home rule.

The retirement of Justin McCarthy from political and Parliamentary activity in 1900, on account of failing health, removed from British public life one of its ablest and worthiest men, and was a distinct loss to the Irish home rule cause.

Mr. McCarthy was born in Cork, Nov. 22, 1830. From 1846 to 1853 he was on the staff of The Cork Examiner, and then joined the staff of The Northern Times of Liverpool. In 1860 he became reporter in the House of Commons for The London Star, of which he was afterwards foreign editor, and then chief editor in 1864. Mr. McCarthy resigned this post in 1868 and came to the United States. There he traveled for nearly three years, visiting thirty-five states. He then lived in New York for some time.

Mr. McCarthy's activity in Parliament was chiefly known by his zeal for the home rule cause.

Mr. McCarthy's literary work was important. He was the author of several novels, critical and historical works, including the celebrated "History of Our Own Times."

NO LICENSE FOR SAVOY

Special to the Review.

Montreal, April 25.—The Board of License Commissioners has unanimously refused to accord the Savoy Hotel a license for the ensuing year. Commissioner Weir, who has rendered judgment for the board, stated that the recent Chapman shooting affair constituted a grave disorder, and within the meaning of the Quebec License Act a license could be refused on that ground.

TWO HUNDRED AND FIVE BODIES ARE RECOVERED

Special To The Review.

New York, April 25— The White Star Line to-day received a message from the cable ship MacKay-Bennett stating that two hundred and five bodies of "Titanic" victims had been picked up. The sea for miles, east and west, of the scene of the disaster is strewn with wreckage, but the search is somewhat hampered by a heavy fog. The morgue ship has embalming fluid enough for seventy bodies.

REMOVED TO NEW HOME

The eighteen inmates of the old Protestant Home, were moved into their handsome new quarters to-day by R. Gibbs' livery. Six of the inmates are men.

The formal opening of the new building will be held next Tuesday evening, April 30th.

PROBABILITIES

Southeasterly winds, fine. Friday increasing southeast winds, becoming showery.

SHOP LICENSE IS RENEWED

Thorn of Local Option Municipalities Still Active

Campbellford, April 25.—The Board of License Commissioners for East Northumberland met at Warkworth and renewed the shop license of the liquor shop at Hastings. With the exception of Campbellford none of those municipalities that were so ready to sign petitions to have the shop license cancelled, were represented. Revs. Brown and Strike were present from here.

Temperance people of Hastings, Havelock, Norwood and Warkworth have themselves to blame that the license was renewed. Petitions are all right, but they must be backed up by argument and nobody should know this fact better than the advocates of temperance. An opportunity has been lost.

Premature Jubilancy.

Willy—I found mother the other day crying over your book of poems.

His Sister's Fiance (delighted)—Oh, is that so? (Aside) Ah, what glory! What fame awaits me! For a man to bring tears to the eyes of such a flint hearted woman as that is certainly a great achievement. (To Willy) She was really weeping, Willy?

Willy—Yes; she said it nearly broke her heart to think that a daughter of hers was going to marry an idiot who could write such rot as that.—London Tit-Bits.

MARINE DEPARTMENT OF BOARD OF TRADE CRITICIZED

May Halt Marriage Case.

Ottawa, April 25.—There is a possibility that the reference to the Supreme Court on the marriage law case may not proceed on May 7.

In an analysis of a case involving the right of the Government to refer such a matter to the Supreme Court, the judges decided that they had jurisdiction to hear it. That judgment, however, was appealed to the Privy Council. The case in court had reference to company incorporation. Should the Privy Council, whose judgment is expected on May 7, decide that such references are ultra vires, the marriage case could hardly be taken up.

If judgment is not delivered before the case comes up, motions will be made by council for Quebec to delay the hearing until such time as the preliminary issue of jurisdiction is determined.

CRUSHED BY CARS, BUT WILL RECOVER

Toronto, April 25.—Wedged between two cars at the corner of Queen and Bathurst street last night, Miss Nellie Stevenson of 30 Fisher street suffered a compound fracture of her right leg and was badly bruised. She was removed to the Western Hospital.

The accident happened shortly after 6 o'clock. The motorman on a westbound Dundas car thought the switch at the corner was open, allowing him to turn north on Bathurst street, the regular route, but, instead, it was favorable to West Queen cars. He ran the car over the switch and, noticing the mistake, applied the reverse, which shot the car back. Miss Stevenson was caught between the rear vestibule of this car and the fender of a Queen car, and was badly crushed. P. C. Padgett rendered first aid and immediately removed the young woman to the hospital. She will recover.

Farmer Charged With Arson.

Waterford, April 25.—Fred Messecar, a prosperous farmer living near here, was arrested by provincial detectives. A charge of arson is laid against him in connection with the burning of a barn on the farm of Mr. Albert McMichael last fall.

Several recent fires of incendiary origin are also being investigated.

RESCUED CHILD FROM WATER

Kingston, April 25.—The little daughter of Dean Bidwell had a miraculous escape from death when a portion of a stone wall at the Tete De Point barracks gave way. The child was sitting on the wall when it toppled over and she was thrown into the lake, but was saved by the prompt action of Capt. C. F. Constantine, who happened to be passing at the time and who jumped into the water and got her out.

Child Died From Neglect.

Montreal, April 25.—Ethel Knight, who had just returned to her home here after working in Toronto, has been arrested, charged with being criminally responsible for the death of her infant daughter here.

The child was found dead in the girl's room, and the coroner's jury yesterday morning brought in a verdict of death by neglect.

Laurier's Tribute to Hays.

Montreal, April 25.—Acting President Wainwright of the Grand Trunk yesterday received the following telegram from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, now at Hot Springs, Va.:

"The premature death of Mr. Hays would have been, under any circumstances, an irreparable loss for his family, for his friends, for the Grand Trunk Railway Co., and for the whole country. The awful catastrophe in which he lost his life adds horror to the gloom all will feel. The blow must be particularly severe for the company at a time when it is engaged in enterprises of such gigantic proportions."

Looks Like Quiet May Day.

Ottawa, April 25.—Reports to the Department of Labor indicates a particularly quiet May Day this year, with a comparative absence of labor disputes.

For the season, labor conditions are especially satisfactory. No board of Conciliation is sitting at present, nor is there any application for one pending.

Hanged Himself In Cell.

Montreal, April 25.—Stanislaus Radishiefsky, a Pole, serving a sentence of eight months for stealing money from a fellow-boarder after which he was to have been deported, yesterday morning committed suicide by hanging himself with a strap in the lavatory of the jail.

More Care Should Have Been Taken Says Lord Muskerry.

London, April 25.—Severe criticisms of the marine department of the Board of Trade were made by Lord Muskerry at the meeting of the Imperial Merchants' Guild yesterday afternoon.

Lord Muskerry declared that the measures urged by the guild met with bitter opposition, and he hoped that the great disaster to the Titanic would lead the public to insist on a full and searching enquiry by an independent committee into the methods pursued by the marine department.

Lord Muskerry stated explicitly that, although the advisory committee had presented a report to the Board of Trade last July calling attention to the insufficiency of boats on ocean-going liners, "Not a single thing had been done or any notice taken until the news came that the Titanic had struck an iceberg. Then the marine department wrote to each member of the committee saying that it agreed with their proposals. They, however, might go further and that meant that the marine department desired to throw the blame on other shoulders."

Lord Muskerry hoped that the advisory committee would insist on a reform of the marine department, and on the appointment of a man possessing professional knowledge of the sea as its chief.

Sir Ernest Shackleton emphasized the importance of having a committee consisting of unbiased practical men. He continued: "We do not want men like the Archbishop of Canterbury on this job."

Sir Ernest Shackleton evidently referred to the fact that the Archbishop of Canterbury is a member of the Board of Trade.

COMMISSION TO PROBE CHARGES

Toronto, April 25.—Eudo Saunders, chief of the provincial license department, has been appointed a special commissioner by the Attorney-General's Department to investigate the serious charges against the license commissioners of Goderich.

Michael Farr, an hotelkeeper in that town, claimed that the official in question promised to protect his hotel against the impending reduction of licenses from eight to six, for a consideration of $600. Thereupon he reported the case to the crown attorney.

A meeting will be called at Goderich to-day, but it is likely that the remainder of the week will be required to subpoena witnesses. The official enquiry, it is understood, will commence next Monday afternoon, and Hon. W. J. Hanna says the case will be prosecuted to the end.

Repairs at Queen's Park.

Toronto, April 25.—Work has been resumed on the interior of the rebuilt west wing of the Parliament Buildings. After the temporary hold-up during the session, the scaffolding is again in place and the noise of the hammer and chisel is echoing through the building just as was the case prior to Feb. 7. The ground floor and first floor are practically completed, the remaining work to be done on the second and third floors.

Navigation Opens at Soo.

Sault Ste. Marie, April 25.—The Agawa of the Algoma Steamship Line arrived up from Midland at 6 last night, and proceeded through the Canadian locks, tying up at the commercial dock. She was reported from Detour at noon and, according to the statement of the captain, experienced little difficulty with ice.

LIFE IN ANCIENT ROME.

Its Problems Were Pretty Much the Same as Those of Today.

In reviewing the book "The Common People of Ancient Rome" a critic says: "It should be something of a corrective to modern conceit to note how little we have advanced since paternalism first became dominant in Rome and since the Roman government prided itself on opening public baths and washhouses for the people. Diocletian denounced the rich and their luxuries, attributed to them the high prices of necessaries, in language almost identical with a radical newspaper of today. Plautus tells us of the trusts that were founded to control prices, and the "trust problem" was as much a reality in ancient Rome as it is today.

"Capital and labor were highly organized, and labor was indefatigable in its efforts to secure special privileges for its guilds. There were benefit societies, burial societies and insurance societies. The man in the street talked then just as he talks now. He discussed the claims of rival political candidates, he studied the political platforms, he read the advertisements in public places, and he protested against their defacement of the scenery. It is indeed hard to find a single feature of modern life, a single reform, a single problem, without its counterpart in ancient Rome.

"We have even borrowed the Roman slang. A slave in a play of Plautus says: 'Do you catch on?' (tenes). 'I'll touch the old man for a loan' (tangam senem, etc.), or 'I put it over him' (ei os sublevi). The illiterate Roman used the double negative, just as it is used today. 'You ought not to do a good turn to nobody' (neminem nihil boni facere oportet)."

Coughs, Colds Bronchitis

If there is an ailment in the throat or chest, it is surely essential that the remedy be conveyed direct to the affected part. It's because the healing vapor of Catarrhozone is breathed into the sore, irritated throat and bronchial tubes, because its balsamic fumes kill the germs and destroy the cause of the trouble. These are the reasons why Catarrhozone never yet failed to cure a genuine case of Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, or Throat Trouble.

The wonderfully soothing vapor of Catarrhozone instantly reaches the furthest recesses of the lungs, produces a healing, curative effect that is impossible with a tablet or liquid, which goes merely to the stomach, and fails entirely to help the throat or lungs.

To permanently cure your winter ills, your coughs, sneezing and Catarrh, by all means use a tried and proven remedy like Catarrhozone. But beware of the substitutor and imitator. Look for Catarrhozone only. 50c and $1, at all dealers. 10

VALUE OF WATER POWER

In a pamphlet, recently issued by Mr. W. K. McNaught, M.P.P., light is thrown upon the value of the water powers of Ontario. Estimates are given by which the total estimated water powers of the province are put at 7,231,787 horse-power. Mr. McNaught believes it fair to assume that our water powers will have a minimum development appreciating to one half of these estimates, or say 3,000,000 horse power, which would appear to be a conservative estimate.

Translated into coal, and taking twenty tons of coal as the amount necessary to produce one horse-power energy for twenty-four hours per day for one year (and this he believes to be a low estimate) it would mean that our water powers are as valuable to Ontario as coal mines capable of producing 60,000,000 tons of coal a year.

Translated into dollars and cents, it means that, taking coal at $3.00 per ton, we would have an annual development of power from our waterfalls, which if produced from coal, would cost us $180,000,000 in cash per per year. And these returns would not be for one year, but for all time.

On taking only the difference between the steam generated hydro-electric power, which difference is calculated at $20 per horse-power per year, the saving would amount to $60,000,000 per annum, if estimated on the 3,000,000 horse-power which our waters are capable of producing.

Another comparison, and a striking one given by Mr. McNaught, is that the value of the crops of Ontario for one year, as given in a government report, is $164,077,282, which is considerably less than the actual cash value which could be obtained from our water power development were it utilized to its full capacity.

It is no wonder that the Hon. Clifford Sifton said that "the flowing waters of Canada are, at the present moment, apart from the soil, our greatest and most valuable undeveloped natural resource. They are more valuable than are our minerals because, properly conserved, they will never be exhausted; on the contrary, they will be increased."

Mr McNaught points out that the greater part of the power at present used in this province, is generated from steam produced from coal, imported from the United States, at an annual cost of over $16,000,000. Even if the utilization of all our water powers could not produce more electric power than would offset this $16,000,000 now paid for steam coal, it would be a wise policy, as he intimates, to try to keep this vast amount of money in Canada, where it would be used for the purpose of paying our own artisans and engineers in order to utilize water-powers which would otherwise go to waste instead of sending it to swell the pay roll of United States coal miners, or to fill the coffers of the coal barons of that country.

These considerations are sufficient to show the value of the Ontario water powers. But there is another consideration which Mr. McNaught points out, and that is that the citizens of the province are really dependent for their fuel upon a foreign country, and the supply of this vital necessity may be cut off at any time from any one of a number of causes. A strike of the miners might either cut off the supply or raise the price to double the ordinary figure. In case of war between Great Britain and the United States, the export of coal to Canada would at once be prohibited. If war between Canada and the United States is considered impossible, which we hope it is, there is, Mr. McNaught says, still another and more real danger infronting us in regard to the coal question, and that is, that the time is not far distant when necessity will compel the United States to prohibit the export of coal, and other natural products, which cannot be replaced. Mr. Andrew Carnegie is quoted as saying at a meeting called by the President, that the United States was then within measurable distance of the exhaustion of their supply of anthracite coal, and he placed the life of the Pennsylvania coal fields at less than fifty years, even at the present rate of consumption. The Hon. George Ottis Smith, a Director of the United States Geological Survey, has published the opinion that, "in respect to no mineral is there greater need of emphasizing the folly of exporting raw material. Let us keep our coal at home, and with it manufacture whatever the world needs."

It is not only for power for manufacturing that the water powers are valuable, but for light, and perhaps before long, for heating purposes.

NOTE AND COMMENT

The Canadian Pacific Railway Upper Lakes fleet of steamers are being equipped with wireless telegraph apparatus, and there will be several shore stations.

There is news bad enough connected with the sinking of the Titanic, but that did not suffice for some news vendors, and fake despatches were sent out. Mr. Chevre, the Montreal Sculptor, was quoted as making sensational statements, but he denies the interviews and says they were utterly preposterous. It would be satisfactory if the perpetrators of these frauds were punished.

Mining stocks are looked upon by many as risky investments, and and some of them certainly are. A drop of from $5.50 a share for Porcupine Central, to seven cents in two days; in Porcupine Northern of from $1.50 to five cents, and in Porcupine Southern of from $2 to six cents in the same time, is a recent record. These properties were under one control, and were manipulated by the controller.

GREAT CHANGE IN A FEW DAYS

Dodd's Kidney Pills Made Wm. Gervais a New Man

His Muscles Cramped, he was very Irritable and he had Headaches—Dodd's Kidney Pills Changed It All.

Hitchcock, Sask., April 24.—(Special)—Mr. Wm. Gervais, well known and highly respected here, is telling his friends of an almost miraculous change Dodd's Kidney Pills have made in him. He is a man of few words, but he speaks straight to the point.

"My muscles would cramp," Mr. Gervais says. "My head ached and I was very irritable until I used Dodd's Kidney Pills. Two boxes made a new man of me."

A change in a few days from a nervous, irritable condition, with an aching head and a presentment that a serious illness was hovering over him, to rousing, energetic health was what Dodd's Kidney Pills did for Mr Gervais. That's what they have done for thousands of others on the prairies. No matter where you go you will hear of cures they have made. If you don't know from your own experience, your neighbor will tell you they are the one sure cure for any form of Kidney Disease.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

How Mrs. Reed of Peoria, Ill., Escaped The Surgeon's Knife.

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctor said I had a tumor and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a well and healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. I am glad to tell anyone what your medicines have done for me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Mrs. Lynch Also Avoided Operation.

Jessup, Pa.—"After the birth of my fourth child, I had severe organic inflammation. I would have such terrible pains that it did not seem as though I could stand it. This kept up for three long months, until two doctors decided that an operation was needed.

"Then one of my friends recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and after taking it for two months I was a well woman."—Mrs. JOSEPH A. LYNCH, Jessup, Pa.

Women who suffer from female ills should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one of the most successful remedies the world has ever known, before submitting to a surgical operation.

herself was not fashioned of the softer human clay which expresses its strenuous emotions by fainting fits or hysteria, some such feminine expedient would certainly have prevented her from going another hundred yards along the south road had some wizard told her how nearly she had guessed the truth.

But the luck of the born adventurer saved Medenham from premature exposure. "I dare all" was the motto of his house, and it was fated to be tested in full measure ere he saw London again. Of these considerations the purring Mercury neither knew nor cared. She sang the song of the free highway, and sped through the leafy lanes of Surrey with a fine disregard for Acts of Parliament and the "rules and regulations therein made and provided." Soon after one o'clock, however, she was compelled to climb the downs in meek agreement with two lines of toiling chars-a-bancs and laboring motors. Just to show her mettle when the opportunity offered, she took the steep hill opposite the stands with a greyhound rush that vastly disconcerted a policeman who told Medenham to "hurry up out of the dip."

Then, having found a clear space, she dozed for a while, and Cynthia, like a true-born American, began the day's business by giving the answer before either of her companions even thought of putting the Great Question.

"Grimalkin will win!" she cried. "Mr. Deane told my father so. I want to play Grimalkin for ten dollars!"

CHAPTER II.

The First Day's Run.

Though Medenham was no turf devotee, he formed distinctly unfavorable conclusions as to the financial stability of the bawling bookmakers near at hand.

"If you wish to do any betting, Miss Vanrenen," he said, "give me the money and I will invest it for you. There is no hurry. The Derby will not be run till three o'clock. We have an hour and a half in which to study form."

For the life of him he could not imitate the complete annihilation of self practiced by the well-bred English servant. The American girl missed the absence of this trait far less than the other woman, but, by this time, even Mrs. Devar began to accept Medenham's good-humored assumption of equality as part of the day's amusement.

Cynthia handed him a card. She had bought while they were crawling up the hill behind a break-load of jeering Cockneys.

"What will win the first race?" she asked. "Father says you men often hear more than the owners about the real performances of horses."

Medenham tried to look knowing. He thanked his stars for Dale's information.

"I am told Eyot has a chance," he said.

"Well, put me a sovereign on Eyot, please. Are you playing the ponies, Mrs. Devar?"

That lady, being quick-witted, took care not to offend Cynthia by pretending not to understand, though it set Medenham's teeth on edge to hear a racehorse called a pony. She opened a gold purse and produced a coin.

"I don't mind risking a little," she tittered.

Medenham found, however, that she also had handed him a sovereign, and his conscience smote him, for he guessed already, with accuracy as it happened, that she was Miss Vanrenen's paid chaperon during the absence of the girl's father on the Continent.

"Personally, I am a duffer in matters connected with the turf," he explained. "A friend of mine—a chauffeur—mentioned Eyot—"

"Oh, that is all right," laughed Cynthia. "I like the colors—Eau de Nuil and white. Look! There he goes!"

She had good eyes, as well as pretty ones, else she could not have distinguished the silk jacket worn by the rider of a horse cantering at that moment along the cleared course. Crowded coaches, four rows deep, lined the rails near the judge's box, and the gay-hued parasols of their feminine occupants almost completely blocked the view, a distant one in any case, owing to the width of the intervening valley.

Medenham raised no further protest. He walked to a stand where a press of people betokened the presence of a popular layer of odds, found that Eyot's price was chalked up at five to one, and backed him for four pounds. He had to push and elbow his way through a struggling crowd; immediately after the bet was made, Eyot's quotation was reduced by two points in response to signals tick-tacked from the inclosures. This, of course, argued a decided following for Dale's selection, and these eleventh hour movements in the turf market are illuminative. Before he got back to the car there was a mighty shout of "They're off!" and he saw Cynthia Vanrenen stand on the seat to watch the race through her glasses.

Mrs. Devar stood up, too. Both women were so intent on the troop of horses now streaming over the crest of the six-furlong course that he was able to stare his fill without attracting their attention.

"I like Cynthia," he said to himself, "though I shall be in a deuce of a mess if I meet her anywhere after this piece of masquerading. Not much chance of that, I expect, seeing that Dad and I go to Scotland early in July. But what a bore to tumble across Jimmy's mater! I hope it is not a case of 'like mother like son,' because Jimmy is the limit."

A strange roar, gathering force and volume each instant, rose from a hundred thousand throats. Soon the shout became insistent, and Cynthia Vanrenen yielded to its magnetism.

"Eyot wins!" she cried delightedly. "Yes, none of them can catch him now. Go on, jockey—don't look round! Oh, if I were your master I'd give you such a talking to. Ah-h-h! We've won, Mrs. Devar—we've won. Just think of it!"

"How much, wonder?" Mrs. Devar, though excited, had the calculating habit.

"Five pounds each," said Medenham, who had approached unnoticed during the tumult.

Cynthia's eyes sparkled.

"Five pounds! why, I heard some betting person over there offering only three to one."

It was a task beyond his powers to curb an unruly tongue in the presence of this emancipated schoolgirl. He met her ebullient mood halfwaf.

"I have already beaten the market—that is, if I get the money. Horrible thought! I may be welshed!"

He strode back rapidly to the bookmaker's stand.

"What do you think of our chauffeur now?" cried Cynthia radiantly, for the winning of those few sovereigns was a real joy to her, and the shadow of the welsher had no terrors since she did not know what Medenham meant.

"He improves on acquaintance," admitted Mrs. Devar, thawing a little under the influence of a successful tip.

He soon returned, and handed them six sovereigns apiece.

"My man paid up like a Briton," he said cheerfully. "I have no reliable information as to the next race, so what do you ladies say if we lunch quietly before we attack the ring for the Derby?"

There was an awkard pause. The air of Epsom Downs is stimulating,

"Eyot wins!" she cried delightedly.

especially after one has found the winner of the first race.

"We have not brought anything to eat," admitted Cynthia ruefully. "We ordered some sandwiches before leaving the hotel, and we mean to stop for tea at some old-world hotel in Reigate which Mrs. Devar recommends."

"Unfortunately I was not hungry at sandwich time," sighed Mrs. Devar.

"If it comes to that, neither was I, whereas I have a most unromantic appetite now. I am rather inclined to doubt the quality of anything we can buy here."

Medenham's face lit up.

"India!" he cried. "Have you been to India?"

Yes, have you? My father and I

Warned by a sudden expansion of Mrs. Devar's prominent eyes, he gave a quick turn to a dangerous topic, since it was in Calcutta that the gallant ex-captain of Horton's Horse had "borrowed" fifty pounds from him. Naturally, the lady omitted the telltale prefix to her son's rank, but it was unquestionably true that the British army had dispensed with his services.

"I was only thinking that acquaintance with the East, Miss Vanrenen, would prepare you for the mysterious workings of Kismet," said Medenham lightly. "When I came across Simmonds this morning I was bewailing the fact that my respected aunt had fallen ill and could not accompany me to-day. May I offer you the luncheon which I provided for her?"

He withdrew the wicker basket from its nook beneath the seat; before his astonished guests could utter a protest, it was opened, and he was deftly unpacking the contents.

CORNERS IN COINS

Odd Schemes That Were Worked by Wily Operators.

CLEVER RUSE OF A NEW BANK

It Won the Good Will of the Town by "Obliging" Its Citizens After Cornering All Its Metal Money—A Russian "Prophet" Who Made a Rich Haul.

There have occurred from time to time in various countries all manner of "corners" in coins, traceable to all manner of queer origins.

Some years ago an individual named Peterson established in a "boom" town of a new state a bank that was a branch of a larger institution elsewhere. As, for special reasons, the people of the new town would have nothing to do with the new bank the outlook for Peterson was a gloomy one.

After reflection he hit upon a happy expedient. He sent out men commissioned to go to all the stores of the place to get change for greenbacks and banknotes. In a little while he had all the coined money in the town, the result being, of course, that the good people of the coming metropolis were flush of greenbacks, but had no "change."

Some one suggested that Peterson's bank might possess some of the coined pieces, and accordingly a rush was made there, where every one was obliged with silver. The ruse of the wily Peterson had the desired effect, as the next morning his bank was filled with depositors.

Superstitition has frequently been the basis of a corner in coins of a particular denomination. A remarkable case of this kind occurred in southern Russia in 1903. There appeared at Berdiansk, on the sea of Azov, a person proclaiming himself a prophet, and as such he announced his intention of redeeming the world. Among the queer doctrines advanced by this individual was included the decree that all his followers must retain all five kopeck pieces issued in the year 1861, the year of the emancipation of the serfs. They were by reason of that event held to be holy.

It was not long before the ignorant peasants in the vicinity became convinced that all pieces of that denomination should be taken to the prophet for preservation. The heaven sent one further announced that should the fatherland get into difficulty every one of the coins in question would "turn to gold" and thus save the empire.

And so it happened that over an area of 300 miles Russian peasants were feverishly collecting the "holy" pieces and turning them over to the prophet. When he had gathered a goodly number of the coins he decamped.

In a way the Russian government may be said to corner its own coins of one denomination. Each year it mints a limited number of bronze pieces of the nominal value of one-fourth of a kopeck, about one-eighth of a cent. As these coins are practically not in circulation, only a few are issued.

It is really an easy matter in small towns to corner a particular coin. At a Welsh holiday resort members of the local band became so indignant at the large proportion of halfpennies in their "silver collections" that they locked up every halfpenny received. The consequence was that in a few weeks there was hardly a halfpenny in the town. Then the band reaped a harvest of coins of higher value.

Cornering gold coins demands a capital that few men possess. Some years ago, however, at Dieppe there occurred a sudden scarcity of ten franc and twenty franc pieces, due to the operations of an eccentric Britisher, who for some cryptic reason had the day before changed several hundred banknotes of high value into gold. Laden with the coins, he left for Paris, and a week elapsed before the town regained its normal amount of gold.

An attempt to corner the Maria Theresa dollars, used in parts of northern Africa, collapsed by reason of a queer circumstance. An Abyssinian, Ras Makoppo, conceived the unique scheme of collecting all specimens of these coins extant in his district. As they were old coins, he reasoned they would rise in value. When he had possessed himself of about 3,000 of them he found that the country was as well supplied with them as before.

While he had been busy collecting the old coins modern Maria Theresa dollars, made in Germany, were being imported by the thousand. The result was that the coin fell in value, and the too astute chief lost half his wealth.—New York Herald.

Better than Ringing Door-bells

A PIANO manufacturer recently made a house-to-house canvass. He's one of those men with an absurd fear of the "waste-circulation" bugaboo—cannot get away from the haunting thought that only 10 out of every 100 readers of a newspaper may be possible buyers of his goods.

So he refused to advertise, and went a-canvassing—inviting people to come to his piano recitals. Then he wondered why they didn't come.

This is why:

He wasn't reaching the people.

His canvassers rang every door-bell in town. They talked to some one in every house.

But one in every household isn't enough—particularly if it doesn't happen to be the right person. And, as a rule, it wasn't the right person—it was a servant, or a child. The woman of the house was seldom seen; the man of the house, never.

Now, if the piano maker had placed an ad. in the newspaper, it would have reached thousands, where the canvassers could reach only hundreds.

And even though only 10 per cent. of the readers are actual piano buyers, this does not mean that the advertising read by the other 90 per cent. is wasted. Advertising talks, not only to the prospective buyer, but also to his wife, his grown-up sons and daughters, his mother—even his mother-in-law. Their coaxing will help to convince the head of the house—and pretty soon there'll be a piano in that home.

This and dozens of similar cases which might be cited to show that "waste circulation" is an empty bugaboo, and should deter no one.

Take the motor truck. It can be sold only to large firms. Yet a motor truck manufacturer is successfully Advertising in daily papers. He realizes that he must reach, not alone the managers of the concerns that require trucks, but also their directors, their foremen, their head machinists, etc. It is found in actual practice that this Advertising radiates in a thousand directions, and again converges most astonishingly to influence the house that has made up its mind that horse-trucking is too costly and inefficient.

Advice regarding your advertising problems is available through any recognized Canadian advertising agency, or the Secretary of the Canadian Press Association, Room 503 Lumsden Bldg., Toronto. Enquiry involves no obligation on your part—so write if interested.

Two Causes, One Effect.

One morning at breakfast Joey announced that he had the misfortune to fall out of bed the night before.

"That was because you slept too near where you got in," said Ethel, who likes to reason about things that happen to Joey.

"Pooh, that wasn't it!" he retorted, with scorn. "It was because I slept too near where I fell out!"—Youth's Companion.

An Expensive Wedding.

"The bride nearly fainted during the ceremony and had to be supported by her father until it was over."

"Yes, and now I hear her father is supporting both of them."

BUTCHER BOYS ARE LIVING (THEIR SECOND EXPERIENCE) IN PRAIRIE FIRE ZONE

Mr. M. T. Butcher, the Water St. furniture dealer, is suffering considerable anxiety on account of the proximity of a prairie fire to his sons, Messrs. William, Charles and Watson Butcher, who are living on their farms in Saskatchewan. Their property is near Morse and Mr. Butcher has learned that a prairie fire has swept Davidson, a town in Saskatchewan that is only seventy-five miles from Morse. A prairie fire would take little time to cover the distance between those two places and for that reason Mr. Butcher is somewhat alarmed at the danger to which his sons are exposed. So far he has not received any word from any of the young men, nor any information as to whether or not their property has been overrun by the flames.

The three boys are well known in Peterborough having only gone to the West three years ago. The present danger to their stock and crops and buildings is felt all the more keenly because shortly after they settled down on their present site their land was swept by a similar fire to that which is raging at present.

"LOCAL OPTION" DRUNKS MUST GIVE INFORMATION OR REMAIN IN JAIL

Several amendments to the Liquor License Act, henceforth to be rigidly enforced, have passed the Ontario Legislature, and are set forth in the bill which went before the House.

One amendment particularly, under section 141, governing municipalities where local option is in force should be carefully noted. In such municipalities, where any person is found upon a street, or in any public place in an intoxicated condition, owing to the drinking of liquor, he shall, upon prosecution under the Liquor Act, be compelled to disclose the name of the person from whom he obtained the liquor. In case of his refusal to do so, he shall be imprisoned for a period not exceeding three months, or until he discloses the information.

Where local option therefore is in force, it is not likely that there will hereafter, with the amendment in force, be any difficulty experienced in securing from those guilty of intoxication, the names of the parties who were responsible for their condition.

Section 76 of the Liquor License Act has been amended by adding the following:—"Any person so licensed may, if he has reasonable ground to suspect from the conduct of any person who has come upon his licensed premises, although not of notoriously bad character, that such person is present for some improper purpose, may request him or her to immediately leave such premises, and unless the request is forthwith complied with, such person may be forcibly removed."

Scene from "EXCUSE ME" under the direction of Henry Savage, which comes to the Grand next Tuesday, April 30th. Local theatregoers are promised a big treat, this being the same company that appeared in Toronto and Montreal this season. The seat sale will open Saturday morning.

EXAMINER AND A. H. STRATTON

The Review has been asked to reprint the following article, which appeared in the Times:

"When Mr. J. R. Stratton appointed his own brother to the Postmastership of Peterborough, there was much head-shaking. Now that he has been relieved of that situation the Examiner is doing the head-shaking. It charges Mr. Burnham and the Government with all sorts of unfairness, because the "investigation" was not to its liking. To begin with, if Mr. Stratton had any fault to find, all he had to do was to bring the matter before the House of Commons (a very easy matter), which was then in session, and for weeks afterwards. Did he do it? He did not. But Mr. Burnham has said that if Mr. Stratton wants to bring the matter before the House even next session, he will help him to do so. The charge that Mr. Burnham not only held the investigation, but pronounced the judgment, is most unfair. The House of Commons expressly empowers its members to hold investigations, and, if necessary, to pronounce judgment also. It puts all power and discretion in these matters in the members' hands, and has always done so. But Mr. Burnham simply forwarded the evidence in writing to the Department and the Minister pronounced the judgment, and is alone responsible therefor. Mr. Stratton, therefore, had an investigation which the Government adopted and pronounced upon. At no time did Mr. Stratton ask to be present or to be represented at that investigation, and his blanket denial was taken as all the evidence he had to give. Surely it was enough. If Mr. Stratton had had pluck enough to demand an investigation by the House of Commons he would have got his fill of it, and doubtless knew it very well."

THE FUNNIEST FARCE HERE THIS SEASON

"Excuse Me" the Biggest Success of the Season—Don't Miss it Tuesday Night

To the Grand Opera House, next Tuesday, April 30th, Henry W. Savage will send a play that ranks among the most successful stage offerings this producer of successes has presented. It is the farce "Excuse Me" by Rupert Hughes, known from his plays and clever fiction contributions to magazines. "Excuse Me" has a subtitle, "A Pullman Carnival" the descriptiveness of which is evident when it is understood that all the action of the play takes place on the Overland Limited train, bound from Chicago across the continent. No one who has made a trip on a modern Pullman car can have failed to be struck by the possibility for humorous exploitation of the types among the fellow passengers, and "Excuse Me" represents the work of a skillful observer and clever writer who, having noted these possibilities, went about the task of putting them on the stage enthusiastically and joyously. As Reno is one of the principal stopping points for overland trains, the passengers on the particular one which carries the story "Excuse Me" include some who have that "operation metropolis" for their objective point and divorce as their object. Also there are a minister and his wife who, for thirty years have been existing monotonously in a small town and have decided to treat themselves to a vacation without betraying the nature of the husband's calling. Then there is a young couple who would be on a wedding tour but for the fact that the breaking down of a taxicab has prevented their arriving at a parsonage in time for the marriage ceremony before boarding the train. The fact that friends of the couple believe them to have been married adds to the harrowing nature of their experience. In the score and half of passengers who are making the journey are numerous other types, each of whom has experiences and troubles of his own, and in addition there is a regulation train crew and a group of Pullman attendants. The three acts of "Excuse Me" so teem with incident that it would be futile to attempt to tell its story. The fact that it has proved to be the one really big laughing success will be accepted by local playgoers as sufficient to justify an unusual amount of interest. For the interpretation of the story of "Excuse Me" Mr. Savage has gathered a cast that is really remarkable.

Some time ago—and not without fear and trembling—a booklet by Elbert Hubbard, entitled "Politeness Pays" was issued by the Grand Trunk Railway System. The fear, however, that the service might in some measure fall short of the ideal standards set up for the travelling public by this publication, proved groundless, for so loud has been the echo of its tones to be heard throughout the press of Canada and the United States that it has been possible to compile a second booklet entitled "Good Service and Its Results" from a few of the most striking comments. It is indeed, as the sub-title puts it, "An Acknowledgment and Appreciation of the Intelligent Work of Conductors Train Agents, and Train Employees, who have given character to and have made the Grand Trunk Pacific passenger train service renowned."

SURVEY OF NORTHERN PART OF THE COUNTY AND TRENT WATERSHED

Dealing with the subject of Municipal Forestry in Ontario, a publication issued by the Commission of Conservation of Ottawa, has the following to say—

Forestry is a comparatively new science. Municipal forestry, in so far as Canada is considered, is newer still. It was only a year ago that the Ontario Government passed an Act which empowered municipalities to engage in forestry. As a result the county of Hastings has already taken steps to acquire waste lands lands for the purpose of reforesting them.

During the coming summer the Commission of Conservation will supervise a survey of the county of Haliburton and the northern portion of the county of Peterboro in Ontario. The survey is to furnish a detailed description of economic and natural conditions and resources of the watershed in Peterborough and Haliburton counties feeding the Trent canal waters, and to serve as a basis for a plan of management.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

The area comprises about 1,[0]0 square miles, of which as much as can be accomplished in one summer season is to be examined. A map on the scale of 2 inches to the mile on which 5-acre lots can still be conveniently designated, is to serve as basis for description.

The economic conditions to be ascertained will comprise—a Ownership and status of timber limits;

b Municipal relations and tax conditions;

c Farm development, crops, character and quantities;

d Manufactures and mills in existence, and possibilities of local industrial development,

e Means of transportation and development of water-powers, so far as useful for developing local industries;

f Tourist traffic, game and fishing interests.

NATURAL CONDITIONS

The natural conditions to be ascertained, and, as far as possible, to be mapped are—a Topography (in the rough) and deliminations of watersheds;

b Land classification by parcels, down to a minimum limit of 10 acres

c Statements regarding character of climate and soil;

d Character and conditions of forest growth in connection with (b). This will include estimates of merchantable timber standing, and of young growth,

e Studies respecting rate of growth

PLANS FOR DOING WORK

Secure maps and all existing information of region involved.

Collect by correspondence and personal interviews with officials and informed persons, other data of economic conditions.

Two experienced fieldmen, with one or two assistants and small camp outfit, will cruise (investigate) the watersheds to secure all data regarding natural conditions. The topography will be secured by aneroid, only roughly (elevations at given points.) The cruising will be done by the strip system, as far as practicable one mile apart.

Farm areas in use will be noted with indications of the character of the soil; and farm soils found under forest cover will also be indicated. Barren areas will be designated and the character and cause of barrenness as far as possible stated.

Timber conditions will be classified into forest types; softwood, hardwood mixed, stated in proportion of species; and into stand types; virgin, semi-virgin (largest sizes extracted) moderately culled, severely culled, entirely cut, young growth of different ages (differentiation by decades) recent burns, etc. Where merchantable timber occurs, rough estimates of amounts; where reproduction occurs, character and promise, of future growth will be noted. Natural conditions favorable, or unfavorable to reproduction will be noted.

Incidentally, growth rate studies will be made to secure an insight into the time element under various conditions.

As a result, a report will be compiled giving a clear picture of conditions, which, as far as possible, will be indicated on a map. A plan of management, in which suppression of fire will be considered, will be evolved.

WHAT IT COSTS TO KEEP CANADIAN CITIES CLEAN

As examples of the outlay necessary in order to keep some of our Canadian cities clean, the figures for the cities of Toronto and Ottawa for 1911 are given herewith. The population of Toronto (not including North Toronto) according to the census of 1911 is 376,538. The total cost for the removal of ashes, garbage, street refuse and snow during 1911 amounted to $475,508. This does not include the cost of the removal of 5,000 dead animals, 3,200 chickens, 150 barrels of fish and 100 boxes of eggs. The street cleaning department of Toronto, therefore, spends about half a million dollars annually. The removal of ashes and garbage involved an expenditure of $250,000, being an average of $2.94 a building for the year, or less than three cents a call, a very creditable showing. In all, 660 to 700 men were employed during the winter, and 900 during the summer.

The city of Ottawa, which has a population, exclusive of suburbs, of about $7,000, expended $112,000 on its street cleaning service during 1911. Although a much smaller city, the cost of the removal of snow was nearly double what was paid in Toronto, or $22,000, as compared with $14,339.

Such expenditures, while they may be carefully administered, are a very important item in a city's budget. It is not surprising, therefore, that various more or less elaborate attempts have been made to cut down the cost. At the present time, the city of Paris is experimenting with gasolene motor flushing and sweeping machines. Recently the municipal authorities received fifteen vehicles of various types designed respectively for street sweeping and street watering and washing. These will be put through severe tests before it will be finally decided whether or not to adopt them. Canadian city authorities will doubtless follow these experiments with interest and profit.

THE FLOWERS ALONG RAILROADS

The Canadian Pacific Railway Considers its Flowers a Good Asset.

One of the greatest pleasures experienced by the traveller along the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway is the display of flowers at the various stations. From the extreme east, through the rough, wild districts of Northern Ontario, across the prairies and over the mountains, one sees at each station on the line, the well kept flower bed bright with its gay hued flowers. Often times it is the only bright spot within sight and the weary traveller rests his eyes on it with a feeling of delight. Many a time the brightness of the flowers has helped make the journey more pleasant. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have for years encouraged their station agents to get the best possible results under existing conditions and to that end have offered substantial prizes to be competed for amongst them. The Company supplies each agent with the seeds and shrubs and an allowance is made towards the expense of keeping the plot in shape.

The seeds for this year's flowers are being distributed now, the local agent Mr. Dodds, having received his share to-day. The Review has also been favored with an assortment that would fill any amateur gardener with envy. Each variety has been tested repeatedly by the Company's florist and wonderful results are to be obtained in due time. The flowers at the C.P.R. station here are always the object of much admiration during their season.

Mrs. Leonora James Kennedy, Soprano; Mr. Arthur Blight, Baritone; Mr. Harry holgate, Pianist; Miss Clarice Spencer, Elocutionist; are giving one of the finest entertainments of the season in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute, under the auspices of the Literary Society, Friday evening May 3. Pride and Wealth.

Wealth built a splendid mansion and invited Pride to inspect it. Pride came gladly, but found fault with the house and everything in it from cellar to garret.

"Why," said he, "Competence has as good carpets and furniture, and Well-to-do has more costly draperies and pictures and a much more elegant main staircase. Furthermore, I see you have consulted Convenience in regard to some of the arrangements, and this I can construe only as a bitter insult to myself."

To placate Pride Wealth sold his house for a fraction of its value and built a far more costly one. This time Luxury and not Convenience was consulted, and the result pleased Pride so well that he took up permanent quarters in the mansion. He invited in his comrades, Vanity, Ostentation and Prodigality. Wealth was the only one who could not see that the house he had paid for belonged not to himself, but to Pride.

Moral.—Wealth builds and Pride occupies.—Pearson's.

Blind Lighthouses.

The French government is about to establish a system of what mariners call blind lighthouses. This revolution in maritime signaling consists in the use of Hertzian waves, and it is believed it will prove of far more lasting value than lights, since it is equally effective in foggy weather, when the usual lights cannot be seen. Indeed, some experts look forward to the gradual extinction of coast lights and expect that ships will soon get their bearings from the ticking of wireless receivers. The great difficulty to be overcome is that of establishing direction, enabling a navigator to determine accurately from which particular station the message comes. It is stated that a practicable scheme has now been formulated. The French lighthouse authorities will shortly make experimental trials at certain stations in the channel.—New York Sun.

WESTPHALIAN HAM.

Famous German Dish Goes Through Many Processes.

The foods that come to our table every day have seldom any further interest for us than that they are cooked well, correctly flavored and touch the itchy spot in our appetites. Many of the tastiest morsels we eat have a long and interesting history before reaching us and the curious one would find much of interest if he were to trace the record of his favorite dish to its start.

Westphalian ham, the famous German delicacy, goes through many peculiar processes before it comes to the table. It gets its piquant taste by the use of juniper berries in smoking the meat.

The carcasses are cut in such a way as to retain the whole ham bone together with the hip. The hams are then rubbed thoroughly with a solution of 100 pounds of salt to one pound of saltpetre, when they are placed on cement floors or in vats and thickly strewn with salt. They are allowed to lie in this solution for a period of two weeks and then placed in another receptacle with a 22 per cent. solution of brine. They remain in this solution for a period of 18 days, their position being change from day to day so that those being on the bottom are brought to the top. On the expiration of 18 days they are removed from the brine and packed one upon the other in a cool, dry cellar for four weeks, during which time they are supposed to ripen—that is, to become tender and take on color. They are then cleaned with a stiff brush in lukewarm water and allowed to soak in fresh water for twelve hours. They are then ready for the smokehouse.

The smokehouses consist sometimes of two, and sometimes of three stories, the fire being kindled in the lowest and the meat hung in the second and third, to which the smoke ascends through holes in the flooring. Westphalian hams are invariably smoked over a bright fire made of beech wood only, except that juniper twigs and berries are constantly thrown on the fire. Beechwood sawdust is strewn over the fire in case it becomes too strong. The smoking process requires on an average about eight days.

Has It Ever Occurred to You?

A pretty hand was placed in mine. As I fondled it and grasped it tightly for fear it would get away a new world seemed to open before me.

Oh, how my heart was beating! My blood seemed leaping through my veins, and I know that the color came and went in my face. All was quiet for a moment, words for the time seeming unnecessary.

Again I looked at that little hand, that pretty hand. It did not move and seemed to be resting quietly and lovingly in my own. I tried to speak, but couldn't. The room seemed to be whirling around, and, although I was extremely happy, my lips were dry and no word was uttered.

At last I tenderly laid it down, confident that I had won. But, alas, it was not to be! That pretty hand really meant my downfall.

"Four kings here," said a voice from across the table, and instantly I realized my great loss. As he reached for the stacks of chips in the middle of the table I saw that pretty hand—that lovely mitt which had rested for a moment in my own—swept into the discard. Four queens had met their fate.

Standing the Test.

To test a sentry an officer after the salute said:

"Let me see your rifle." The recruit handed it over, whereupon the officer said in disgust: "You're a fine soldier! You've given up your rifle, and now what are you going to do?" The young fellow drew out a dangerous knife and exclaimed, "Give me that rifle or I'll cut your heart out!"

The officer was more than convinced that he would, and hastily handed the weapon back.—"A Little Tiger's War Diary," by C. W. Bardeen.

Strychnine.

Strychnine is obtained not only from the strychnos nux vomica seeds, but also from the St. Ignatius bean (strychnos ignatii), a chrub or small tree of Cochin China and the Philippines. Its fruit, which is the size of a large pear, contains about 20 brownish seeds about as large as olives.

Vesuvius and Etna.

Vesuvius and Etna are never both active at the same time. When one is most violent the other is most quiescent.

Sec.-Treas.—Vincent Eastwood.
Manager—E. Percy Johnston.

The executive committee was drawn up as follows:—Ross Allison, Howard Hall, Walter Rutherford and Charles Elliott.

TWIRLERS OF TORONTO CLUB MAY GET CANADIAN LEAGUE BERTH

Ottawa, April 25—President McCaffery of the Toronto Basball Club today offered to the Ottawa Club of the Canadian League three pitchers, namely, Jim McGinley, a veteran who has been on the Toronto staff for many years and who was one of their mainstays when they won the championship five seasons since; Cather, a youngster of exceptional promise, and Corey.

The Torontos wished to sell McGinley outright, but wished to retain strings on the other men. Several of the other clubs in the Canadian League have also been negotiating for these twirlers, but McCaffery gave Ottawa first call. The Ottawas wired back asking terms on Cather, but passed up the other two. The locals already have six good pitchers.

President Sam Lichtenhein of the Montreal club offered the Ottawas Pressey, Leclair and several others but his offer was also declined with thanks.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE CIRCUIT

Edward Green, of Gloucester, N.J., who was to report in Peterborough with Manager Templin's squad, will not arrive for some time later.

The Peterborough Ball Club will lose a good member and also their secretary when Mr. W. S. Davidson departs for the west. A number of local men have been considered for the position of secretary for the club, but as it requires a man who understands sports and also the fine points of business, it will be hard to fill this vacancy. Mr. Davidson has been a most capable secretary and his departure from the city will be a great loss to both the business and sporting life of the city.

Guelph, Ont., April 24. — Already the baseball fans of this city are beginning to get excited over the season's prospects. When Manager Needham and four players were seen going down the street yesterday in uniform ready for the first work-out of the season a big crowd of fans tacked in behind in order to get a look at the new material. Jimmy Neher, the Buffalo crack, made the best impression, although the others showed up well.

Brantford, April 25.—John Fisher, M.P., who was appointed a patron of the local baseball team, has written from Ottawa, stating that it is his wish to donate a ten-dollar gold piece to the first player on the Brantford team making a home run on the home grounds, in a league match. Mr. Fisher closes by expressing the hope that the Brantford team will land the championship this season. Needless to say, this handsome offer has been gratefully received and accepted.

It is more than likely that a feature of the local ball season this year will be interesting rivalry among the players for just such prizes as Mr. Fisher has donated so generously put up. Several local merchants have asked for suggestions as to what prizes should be donated.

St. Thomas, April 24.—Carl (Dad) Stewart, of this city, was at a meeting of the owners of the St. Thomas Canadian League club, held yesterday morning, appointed manager of the Saints. Dad was almost the unanimous choice. He has had eight years' experience in minor leagues.

The officers elected were as follows: Honorary president, Mayor R. N. Price; president, C. O. Stanley; vice-president, W. H. Swift; secretary, E. C. Killingsworth; treasurer, J. W. Chantler.

The following players have been instructed to report May 1: Catchers—Welch, Rochester; Powers, Cleveland; Rellin, Cleveland. Pitchers—Howick, St. Thomas; Turner, Philadelphia; Alexander, St. Thomas; Johnston, Boston; Carrier, Detroit; Peterson, Chicago; Wilson, New York; Jones, Macon; Wallace, Cleveland. Infielders—Forgue, Providence; Wilde, Toledo; Gurney and Wright, Detroit; Jackson, Brooklyn; Thompson, Yale College; Pinnance (Indian), St. Clair, Mich., with Bay City last season. Outfielders—Dad Stewart, J. Graney, St. Thomas; Kopp, Toledo; Burns, Kalamazoo.

SPORT TALK

New York, April 25.—The body of Nelsie Williams, a Welsh bantamweight fighter, who lost his life when the Titanic sank, will be brought to New York for burial, it was announced to-day. George MacDonald, Matt Wells manager, has charge of the arrangements. Williams was coming to this country to fight in Pittsburg. He had not been matched. Williams' name is on the list of those whose bodies have been recovered by the Mackay-Bennett cable ship, according to the list checked off and made public by the White Star line. His first name was sent by wireless as "Leslie."

The Toronto Lacrosse Club have signed the two Fitzgeralds, of St. Catharines, and are waiting for "Newsy" Lalonde to sign a contract for $4,500, as player and manager of the Blue Shirts for the coming season.

Inn Names In Germany.

Germany probably holds the record for out of the way inn names. Berlin alone can boast the Angry Louise, the Comfortable Lamb, the Cold Frog, the Dirty Parlor, the Bloody Bones, the Boxers' Den, the Four Hundredweight Man and the Musical Cats, while a suburban landlord, whose house stands near a cemetery and is a popular "pull up" for mourners, has dubbed it, very appropriately, the Last Tear.

Again?

A young English attache of the legation in Washington remarked to an American belle some years ago: "I am really sorry that the Bering sea affair is not likely to be amicably adjusted, for, of course, with our superior navy, we could just wipe you off the face of the earth."

She replied with one word, "Again?"

Mutual Corrections.

Porter—Miss, your train is— Precise Passenger—My man, why do you say "your train" when you know it belongs to the railway company? Porter—Dunno, miss. Why do you say "my man" when you know I belong to my old woman?—London Tit-Bits.

Slow.

"Myra, how long has Joe Nevius been going with you?"

"About eighteen years."

"That seems an awfully long time."

"Yes; I sometimes wonder if Joe's ever going to ask me to marry him."—San Francisco Chronicle.

THE SAMARITANS.

A Meeting and an Interrupted Conference.

By C. B. LEWIS.

Miss Duella Mims, as her cards read, was an elocutionist and quite willing to help others over the same road for pay. So long as her ambition was kept within bounds and her prices were not too steep her native town of 5,000 inhabitants supplied a fair number of pupils, and the local press now and then referred to her in a way that was pleasing.

One unfortunate day Miss Mims decided that elocution such as hers should have no limits. The village boy who fell into the frog pond decided that if it was good for him it ought to be good for the whole United States. Miss Mims reasoned after the same fashion. She collected her bills, packed her trunk and set out for the metropolis, and never was a young woman more sanguine.

In a week she was surprised. In a month she was tired. In two months she had decided to drop elocution and look for a place as a typist and stenographer. Her mind was fully made up on this point, and yet she could not let go of elocution with a bang. She must part from it by degrees and make the parting less painful.

Miss Mims sat at the open window of her boarding house and dallied with elocution. In her well modulated voice she went over three or four of her choicest gems and then brought out "The Wanderer."

She had always made a hit in this. It was about a lovely girl who left her village home for a great city, and after using up all her money and pawning everything that her uncle would advance on she committed suicide, and the landlady found her dead when she went in to collect her week's rent in advance.

In elocuting this pathetic appeal Miss Mims had to simulate discouragement, sorrow, grief, appeal, resignation and several other things calculated to arouse human interest, and she had an audience without knowing it.

On the floor above was a young man who had been in the boarding house almost as long as she had, but they had not been introduced and had taken very little interest in each other. He was the audience on this night. Miss Mims' voice floated up to him, and he listened and became interested. Gradually he found his sympathies aroused. From what he could make out she was clean discouraged and ready for the deadly fumes of charcoal. She was even hungry for food at that moment, and there was no one in the great city to whom she could turn.

The young man was deeply affected. Here was a case right under his nose where sympathy and cash were required, and only that evening he had dodged the landlady when he came in. He was perturbed and upset for a few minutes, but finally reasoned it out that if the poor girl stuck to her program and died it would save her being disappointed in love in the future.

When a long silence had followed her tearful appeal to heaven he brought out a manuscript and began to read aloud. He was no elocutionist. He might have been one had he not become a dramatist at an early age. The manuscript in his hands was a play written by himself. It is needless to give it a name, but it may be said to have been pathetic. It had a hero, and the hero went through trouble enough to swamp a canalboat within five miles of Troy. He kept hoping and hoping, but it was no use. As soon as he came in sight of a good thing it vanished. He hung on and hung on until the beef trust made its last raise, and then he starved to death with the same dignity that he had lived.

What the dramatist was reading was the soliloquy of the hero when he had abandoned all hope and decided that mince pie was no longer for him. The reverie of the elocutionist below was broken by his reading and raving. She listened, and tears of pity came to her eyes. She had thought the world was harsh to her, but here was a worse case than hers. She hadn't gone hungry yet, but here was a young man literally starving to death. She had heard him say that even the mice had abandoned his room and that, unable to find another morsel of food, the cricket no longer sang for him.

Miss Mims did what a practical young woman should do under the circumstances. The hour was not late, and she put on her hat and went downstairs and hunted up a delicatessen store and bought some smoked tongue and crackers. These would keep the spark of life in the young man over night, and next day things might turn for the better with him.

When the dramatist had concluded reading his hero's soliloquy—it was the millionth reading—his thoughts turned once more to the young woman below. He still had a couple of dollars left, and he could not see her die for want of sustenance. In handing in the sustenance he would also hand in his sympathies and encouragement. If he found her obstinately determined to die he might even promise her a leading part in his comedy drama when it was finally put on the road.

He did the only sensible thing he had done since he spelled down a country school and got the idea therefrom that he was born for a dramatist. He put on his hat and went down and went to a saloon. He bought a bottle of beer, and from the remains of the free lunch he gathered up some cheese and pretzels. Beer, cheese and pretzels, as he had read in a medical magazine, will keep a young woman alive for a whole week after she has determined to die.

The two Samaritans did not happen to meet at the door of the boarding house or on the stairs. They went to their rooms for a moment and then emerged on the errand of mercy. They met in the lower hall. The dramatist was the first to speak.

"My dear Miss Mims—you see I have heard your name," he began—"I have learned quite by accident that you are in a bit of trouble and need a friend. I have here some beer and cheese and pretzels, and if you could manage to make them do for a lunch this evening we will talk matters over in the morning."

"You—you are also in trouble, I learn," she stammered in reply. "I have some smoked tongue and crackers here, and if you can get along with them this evening"—

"My dear Miss Mims"—

"My dear Mr. Davis"—

"You surely don't think I'm starving?"

"And you can't think I have fasted all day?"

They sat down on the stairs and compared notes and soon got at the right of things and then sat down on the window seat at the end of the hall and formed the two lunches into a trust. As they ate and drank they learned each other's history. When they had finished she asked:

"How long have you been trying to place your play before the public?"

"Five years," he sighed. "How long have you been trying to get the people of this town to elocute?"

"Two months," and she sighed as well.

"Miss Mims," said the dramatist as he sought to take her hand, "I have known you but a brief half hour, but during that time"—

"Yes!"

Then the landlady appeared and said that altogether too much gas was being used throughout the house and it must be cut off in the halls; also that it was against the rules of the house to leave cracker crumbs around.

Next morning Miss Mims got a place with a hardware firm, and two days later Mr. Davis was seen bareheaded and with a pencil over his ear in front of a shoe store where they sold manufacturers' samples only—every pair warranted as represented or money refunded. The elocution, the dramatic, the sentiment were there, and the landlady is expecting an announcement any evening.

YOU CAN BE ABSOLUTELY SURE OF VALUES

If you carefully read the store advertisements and follow them in your buying.

Merchants advertise certain lines because they know these lines will advertise their stores. Because there is something about certain goods, they are put in conspicuous places and the people are told about them. It may be the exclusiveness or newness of design, it may be an unusual quality, it may be an attractive price.

But there is at least one definite, sure reason why a merchant advertises an article, and he is willing to stake the reputation of his store upon it.

Therefore, when you see an article advertised in THE REVIEW, depend upon it, that article is good value as good value as can be obtained in that particular store.

WHY A WATCH WEARS OUT

Neglect is responsible for most Watches going wrong. A Watch should be thoroughly overhauled, at least once a year. Dust collecting in a Watch causes it to run dry, the grit will then wear away the delicate bearings, If you own a good watch, better be on the safe side — Bring it to our Repair Department where it will receive Skilled Attention.

CAMPBELLFORD HEARD WITH DISMAY THAT NASSAU DAM HAD BEEN SWEPT AWAY

Reports come from Campbellford, that the residents of that town are in fear and suspense lest they be flooded out of their homes and places of employment.

The whole trouble seems to have arisen over reports from Peterborough that a dam had broken away and the waters of the Otonabee were rushing towards Campbellford and would cut all kinds of capers.

Word was received in Campbellford last Friday that the Nassau dam had been carried away and the daily newspaper of that thriving hamlet, held back its issue for some time, in order that a warning could be given through the paper.

The latest report was that a big flood was due last night. Some trouble and inconvenience has been met with, owing to the increased volume of water and last Tuesday, the breakwater at the rear of Smiths mill was carried away. In consequence the machinery cannot be driven by hydraulic power and will be idle until the water lowers.

FINE ENGLISH FARM HANDS SOON GIVEN EMPLOYMENT

Five, able bodied, bright looking chaps from the Old Country, struck Peterborough this morning, in quest of employment, and evidently the god of fortune smiled upon them, each having been satisfactorily located on farms in the space of a couple of hours. Fortunately all the party had been accustomed to farm work, hence the readiness with which positions were found for them. The party were in high spirits over their good luck, the only thing which appeared to be marring their complete happiness, was the thought of being separated. On the passage over they had struck together, three of the party having been chums in their home land.

The best officer Howson could do, was to place three of them with farmers on the same line, near Keene, so that only a distance of three or four miles will separate them.

While the bunch were discussing prospects in the immigration office this morning, two or three farmers, searching for help, dropped in. One likely looking chap caught the fancy of an agriculturist, who began to question him.

"Oh you can always rely on an Englishman to work," was the confident rejoinder to one query.

The man secured the job and left shortly after with his future employer.

The farmers demands for help these days, are very insistent and continuous and Mr. Howson's office is a busy scene every day, and will be for some time to come.

HEARD OF THE WRECK

One of the young men said that the steamer "Asania" on which they travelled across the ocean, received a faint wireless message to the effect that the "Titanic" had struck a berg and was in trouble. They were however, many miles away and the "Asania" was not one of the fleetest of boats. She left Liverpool on April 13, and docked at Portland on April 22.

A report revived at the headquarters of the Grand Trunk Pacific in Montreal, indicates that steel eastward from Prince Rupert has passed the Skeena River Crossing, thus establishing another landmark in the construction in the new Canadian Transcontinental Line. With the building of the superstructure of the bridge at the Crossing, one of the most serious handicaps in the laying of steel for hundreds of miles eastward will have been surmounted, and by autumn it is expected that the line will extend into very considerable areas of fertile farming land and rich mineral territory. The longest and largest tunnel on the G. T. P. System, which is situated just 5 miles east of Hazleton, has also been completed.

WEDDING BELLS

COPSON—ASHFORD

A quiet wedding took place last evening at 7 o'clock, when Mr. Harry Copson, and Miss Mary D. Ashford, both formerly of Northampton, Eng., were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by Rev. R. Pogue, at St. Paul's Manse.

After the ceremony was performed Mr. and Mrs. Copson returned to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. H. Cook, where a wedding repast was given in honor of the young couple. The evening was spent in music and all joined in congratulations to the bride and groom.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Copson will reside at 89 Park street.

SMALL BLAZE AT SHOVEL FACTORY

Fire Department Had Another Early Morning Run

A small fire in the Lundy Shovel and Tool Company's buildings this morning, about 3.26 o'clock, caused some little excitement. The intense heat from one of the annealing ovens ignited some oil. The flames were spied by the watchman, who rang in a fire alarm. A watchman from a neighboring factory, also saw the flames, and the two men turned the private hose on the fire and had it almost extinguished when the fire brigade arrived. There was little damage done and the factory resumed its usual work this morning.

INSPECT REAL ESTATE BEFORE YOU PURCHASE

Gambling Mania Has Taken Hold of People of Ontario

Real estate, whether at home or abroad, should only be bought after personal inspection, on the advice of friends on the spot, or through well known brokers. The gambling mania has taken hold of the people of Ontario, and any conscienceless agent can sell land for residential purposes at $400 a lot, when it is often poor farming land not worth $50 an acre. Inside properties in progressive towns and villages are good investments, particularly when those places are divisional points. A buyer in new districts should carefully figure out whether new railway lines will take away trade from the town in which he intends to make a purchase, for it has often happened that while the town boomed during the period in which it remained "rail-head," it flattened out when business was carried past it, and settlers pressed on to other districts.

Values are already too high in many places, and the price is only kept up by money sent in by persons who generally reside in Eastern Canada, and have no local knowledge.

Good properties would be snapped up at once, and it is not necessary for philantrophic agents to assure widows and people with small savings that these sub-divisions were held particularly for them, because a moment's thought would convince the buyer that the seller was without sentiment, and studied his own pocket, and the commission he was expected to make. People whose savings of a lifetime amounted to a few hundred dollars have invested every cent in land that they cannot possibly sell at present at the price which they paid for it, and in some cases have borrowed money on life insurance policies and mortgages.

The London and Canadian Loan and Agency Co. has decided to withdraw part of its investments from the West and operate more extensively in Ontario. The financial Post makes the following comment under a heading "A Signal of Warning": "If land prices in Western Canada have risen to such a price that outside capital thinks it had best call a halt, the result is sure. The same forces that helped to develop the country will be the cause of checking the rise in prices before the situation becomes acute."

VESSEL STRUCK AN ICE FLOW DURING NIGHT

A young fellow named W. E. Gray from the Old Land, applied to Mr. G. H. Howson, the immigration officer for employment yesterday, and was placed with Mr. Clayton Hanbidge in Otonabee.

The young man is the son of a school-teacher in England, and was himself a teacher for a couple of years, but owing to ill-health, was forced to relinquish the occupation. On medical advice, he sailed for Canada, and intends to experiment with out-door life in an attempt to find the cure.

The vessel on which Mr. Gray sailed was the "Lake Erie" which docked at St. John, N.B., on April 22nd.

The passengers on this boat, so Mr. Gray stated were given considerable of a fright on the trip over. During the night, the vessel stuck an ice-flow with sufficient force to jar the entire ship. The passengers not knowing what happened all tumbled out of their berths to find out what was wrong. Their fears were quieted however, when they saw that the boat was proceeding along without any further trouble.

A WELL SET TRAP

Snared a Blackmailer Who Dared to Invade Wall Street.

TRIED TO WORK JAY GOULD.

But the Old Financier Was Not to Be Scared by a Black Hand Letter, and His Partner Fixed Up a Scheme That Cleverly Caught the Culprit.

The late Jay Gould arrived at his office one morning in a state of mind. "There!" he said to his favorite partner, flinging down a letter which had been addressed to Mrs. Jay Gould. "I don't mind their writing their scurrilous things to me, but when they begin to send them to my wife it's got to be stopped. What can you do?"

The partner first read the letter. The writer premised that he had lost a great deal of money speculating in Gould stocks, especially Missouri Pacific, and required that he be advised how to get back what he had lost and more besides. Unless Mr. Gould imparted to him straight, bona fide money making information he would destroy Mrs. Gould. The manner in which he desired the information to be imparted was this: Every morning an advertisement should be inserted in the personal column of a certain New York newspaper advising him when to buy and when to sell Missouri Pacific. The advertisement should be written in a code which he had devised, so that he alone would receive and understand the tip.

"I think I can catch him," said Mr. Gould's partner. "Just leave it to me."
